MY BLUEPRINTS

Whether we have been here for four years or just one, our time at Andover shapes our personalities and characters. Here, against the backdrop of our school's 550 acres, we lay the foundations for our futures. Since we first arrived on Academy Hill greeted by screaming seniors dressed in tie dye, we've accumulated knowledge, strengthened the bonds of friendship, and built upon our aspirations – following the blueprints with which we began, and drawing those on which we continue. When the time comes to move on, we will look back fondly on the memories forged in dorm rooms and on the great lawn. For the blueprints that guide our daily lives are not easily forgotten.

Generations of scholars, celebrities, politicians, and even presidents followed these same blueprints. They preceded us in running across campus, eating in Commons, and sleeping within the comfort of extra-long twin-sized mattresses. Our forbearers stored their sweaty clothes in our gym lockers, scrawled their class years into the Bulfinch desks we use and stomped their feet to the beat of the same cheers that we scream.

The campus leaves upon us a lasting imprint in more ways than one. We know which piano key in our favorite Graves practice room doesn't sound, which step creaks when we climb to an upstairs classroom in Pearson, and which tree on the great lawn provides the best shade for sunny free periods.

Then, there are the beautiful sensory snapshots forever ingrained in our heads—the warmth of the sunset cascading down the Vista, the green-rusted bronze of the Armillary Sphere, and and the wooden pews of Cochran Chapel. This campus provides common ground for all of its graduates, lending to its students a base off of which we continue to draw our own personal blueprints. We are without "Head Cheerleaders", fraternities, and underground tunnels. We have Blue Key Heads, Head of School Day announcements on Face book, and Blue Cards. But the ubiquitous influence of the Andover experience does not fade with the passing generations of graduates. Each year we continue to draw upon the blueprints of the past. In 2009-2010, we have all contributed to the elaborate illustration of the Andover blueprint, ensuring that it is distinctly reflective of our Andover. It will continue to live in us, and us within in.

It takes people and traditions to create a community out of brick and granite. Enclosed within the Andover bubble, we have made our own impressions on the community. We have turned common rooms into living rooms, academic buildings into dance floors, and classmates into family. Our blueprints go deeper than the rainbow GSA flags draped around the white pillars of Samuel Phillips Hall or the initials etched into the wooden tables in silent study. We have inherited and built upon a culture that will be passed down to the many generations who will take our places at the desks of Morse and lab benches in Gelb. Each passing year comes with Andover/Exeter, Head of School Day, The Club Rally, Senior Spooning, and the Last Chance Dance – all are quintessential Andover moments. But our Andover experience is defined just as much by the events etched into our day planners as it is by those small moments we tend to neglect – long-awaited Friday afternoons confirmed by the Phillipian in our hands, impromptu moments of nostalgia in the Den, study sessions on the lawn interrupted by a stray water balloon, and guesses at whose face is really beneath the Gunga mask.

Our roommates, teammates, and classmates have left lasting marks upon us. These are the people who untangled our feet in the Orientation ropes course and those who will walk side by side with us down the Vista in June. They sat beneath the cavernous ceiling of Graver, commiserating with us over enormous workloads, they acted alongside us in Theater 520 productions, and they passed the ball to us on the soccer field. They became a part of our Andover; harmonizing with us during orchestra concerts, debating with us, laughing with us, listening to us, and providing support, from late night chats to heartfelt hugs.

Our teachers offered us guidance, assistance, and compassion, helping to form the bond between teacher and student unique to Andover. When we were the last to pack up our bag and leave the classroom, our teachers reached out and inquired about our other classes, asked about our extra-curricular activities, dorm life, or the shot we scored last Wednesday. We will remember how a history teacher inspired us to boldly argue a thesis or how a math teacher meticulously guided us through a seemingly endless equation. Beyond class lectures and endless comments in the margins of our essays, our teachers leave a mark on the intellectual spirit that guided us here and that leads us into the future.

Outside of the classroom, we committed to clubs, community service, and research projects. We devoted copious amounts of time to argue our points in Model UN or work tirelessly on layouts in the basement of Morse. During those nights we stayed awake into the early hours of the morning, whether preparing for math competitions or perfecting a submission to Commentary, we all share a common resolve a sense of purpose that goes beyond what is merely expected of us.

Following the Andover blueprint – the multifaceted expectations of this place – is by no means an easy task. We don't always account for the speed bumps and surprises along the way. Yet, we persisted amidst buckets of rain to complete our Non Sibi Day tasks, we met seemingly impossible deadlines, we played hard against tough competitors to achieve athletic glorification, and we studied relentlessly in the face of grueling final examinations.

In the end, we prevail. Blueprints may change – sometimes on account of rain, wind, or a stampede of Exeter students– but once completed, they will forever remain ingrained in memory. Together, our experiences comprise a collection worth far more than their individual value. They are meshed and intertwined and after they've overlapped and merged, we find ourselves standing in awe of the collective Andover experience. We emerge in white dresses and blue ties on the Vista one Sunday morning as people with hearts stained blue.

This book is a historical document of how we adjusted old blueprints, rewrote our own, and prepared for the many more to come. It serves to showcase the many blueprints of the Class of 2010 and provide a strong foundation as we soar to new destinations and horizons. More than that, this book is our blueprint, the indelible mark that every student, teacher, and member of our community leaves on Andover over the course of the year.

"The teacher at the Brace Center said, 'There are certain things about certain cultures, like some guys may wear skirts.' There was a Blue Key Head sitting in the corner, and he was wearing a skirt. He just looked down, and was like 'yeahhh.'" -Gina Sawaya '13

"I was trying to find the Cage, but I walked right by it into Siberia. I was also late for every class on the first day."
-Siddarth Palaniappan '13

When the Blue Keys said, 'What do we eat?', there was just this silence because none of us knew what to say. It was funny at the time, but I'm glad I know the answer now."

"When the rain finally seemed to let up, we were all thrilled. The new kids came out of the chapel, and all the Blue Keys screamed like crazy. Gunga even picked up and twirled around an unsuspecting freshman. Then we all took off running toward the sphere on the Great Lawn: a blur of cluster flags, Blue Keys, and confused new students. The moment we arrived at the sphere, it started to DOWNPOUR like I've never seen before. It was way too wet to stay outside, so we led all the students to the cage in the pouring rain. In typical Big Blue spirit, we cheered the whole way there. It was ridiculous, but it was certainly an orientation that we won't forget anytime soon."

4. New students participate in group-bonding activites in the Sanctuary . In one of the exercises, groups had to work together to get everyone over a wooden wall. Austin Teece '12, a new student, said, "In the name of Andover, I conquer these fortifications."

5. Students split into teams to play the ThinkFast game. Students had to buzz in answers to trivia questions in order to earn points. Saroj Gourkanti '13 said, "The Think Fast game was a nice way to take my mind off the stress of adjusting to the school."

6. Jake Zellner '13 moves into Rockwell. His first feelings at Andover were a mixture of anxiety and excitement. He said, "I can't believe I'm really here."

7. Blue Key Head Scotty Fleming '10 screams in the rain. The Blue Keys, armed with ponchos and cough drops, persisted through the weather. Fleming said, "Sure, the Blue Clock is romantic... but standing in the pouring rain and screaming incessantly for your school? That's love."

We could wring buckets out of our banners, but the words never bled. To the anticipative new students, the car horn blasted a single embarrassing discordant chord, but to the die-hard seasoned Blue Keys yelling at the curb of Chapel Avenue, the cacophonous symphony of beeps never sounded so sweet. Led by the Blue Key Heads of 2010, orientation weekend was packed. New students felt inundated with the mass amount of new faces, names, and Big Blue cheers. In the Sanctuary, they overcame the ropes course with a newfound sense of Andover companionship. As they ventured downtown, they met with long lines at Andover Bookstore and were surprised at how much textbooks actually cost. In between the first day of classes, they found their way to Commons to make an important choice: Upper Right or Lower Left? A week later, the Blue Keys marched the new students from their dorms to a brightly lit Samuel Phillips Hall and Ate Red Meat... Raw. The new students felt utterly overwhelmed, a preview of what is to come once they over commit to sports, classes, and clubs- but the Blue Keys never let up.

Square One

The tiny squares of each GW mailbox cradled the year's first issue of The Phillipian. These stuffed mailboxes signify something powerful to the seasoned veterans, the returning students: it's Friday. It's the first weekend. At the Club Rally, club heads jump on every passerby, crying out a defiant plea for another new club member, and losing their voices in the process. Andover's accepted culture of shouting in each other's faces seems bizarre at first, but then again, boys flaunt their legs under navy blue skirts here. The much anticipated Video Dance finally arrives on Saturday night: you have spent hours getting dressed to take part in one massive crowd of sweaty upbeat adolescents in Borden Gym. The dark is illuminated by neon necklaces and the big video screen. Quad Day serves as a Sunday study break. Students spend the sunny day on the green playing poker games and frisbee and decorating swine flu masks. Standing on the quad, you're fair game to be party-boyed by a shirtless Taylor boy, clad in a blazer, boxers, and high socks. The weekend has left you breathless, but revitalized for the rigorous days ahead. You have new friends, a flood of tagged photos on Facebook, and a temporary tattoo from a Quad Day booth that won't wash away quick enough.

PERSPECTIVES

"We had to party-boy Chioma. We tried to sneak up behind her, but she realized that we were coming. The whole dorm surrounded her but she kept plowing through us. Eventually, someone had to tackle her to stop the ferocious Chioma. She was by far the toughest snag of the day."

2. Seniors gather at Senior Tea to grab a pastry or a cup of coffee. It is one of many privileges for seniors. Helen Lord '10 said, "Even though I can get coffee from Commons, I would rather go to Senior Tea."

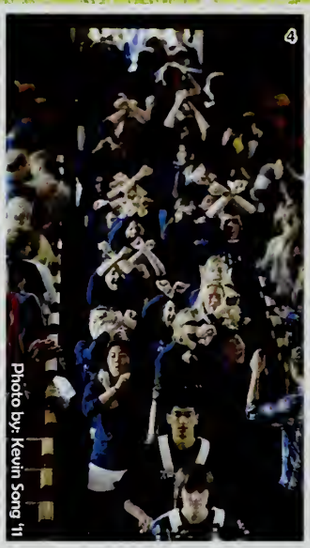

3. Michael Scognamiglio '10 bumps arms with Mrs. Chase to form an X at the Senior-Faculty Reception. The greeting is meant to honor the Class of 2010 and is a method to prevent swine flu. Things are a little different when you have "SEN10RS" plastered on your back, instead of a jersey number or the trademark of some popular mall brand. Very different. You notice the eyes of new students as they look at you with a trace of awe they would never admit. As leaders and mentors, you are the one they look up to. On the cobblestone path passing Samuel Phillips Hall, the uneven paths somewhere in the Knoll, and the flawlessly paved way of the Elm Walkway, you stride to classes, sports, and endless commitments. But, this year, empowered by the back of your shirt as well as the 299 other bodies matching your gait, you leave a different type of footprint on the well-traversed grounds of Andover: a print of dignity, a print of pride. Senior Tea, the Vista Walk, receptions at Mrs. Chase's house, arms in an X: senior year is here, and it has finally dawned on you that this is where you belong. This is your Andover. This is 2010.

My Non Sibi Day

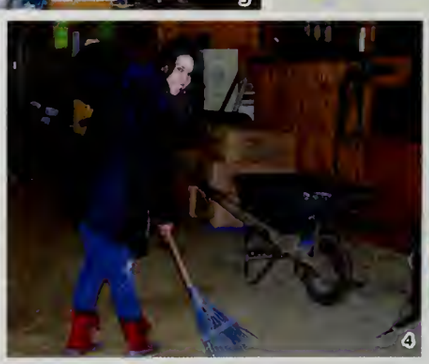

"Sitting on the bus on our way to the Food Project Lynn, our project leaders, Marilyn Harris '11 and Peter Yang '10, made us come up with a vegetable or fruit that starts with the first letter of our name. I was 'Jalapeno Julie.' For the rest of the day, we took on our new produce identities, and called each other by our new names. 2. Zahra Bhaiwala '10 spent the day at International medical Equipment Collaborative (IMEC). She sorted and packed medical supplies to be shipped to developing countries. She said, "This wasn't money we were raising and sending out, not knowing whose hands they would end up in; these were actual pieces of equipment to be shipped where people really need them."

3. Ryan McKinnon '10 worked in Lawrence at the Sabre Foundation. Along with a large group of students, he sorted books to be shipped to countries in need. He said, "Alphabetizing books is more difficult than it seems."

4. Daniela Pimentel '11 spent her day at Ironstone Farm.

Non Sibi Day

"Non Sibi," Andover's most prominent Latin mantra propelled us out of our beds on Saturday, October 3. The steps of the chapel weren't littered with trash but with people, as the Campus Beautification group has already swept the stone steps of Cochran Chapel pristine. Students boarded buses shuttling them off to different counties of Massachusetts: Lynn, Dorchester, Cambridge. We volunteered ladling soup for hungry people, digging trenches to dispose trash, sprucing up Thompson Island, and weeding out farms to prepare for the winter. And yet, at the end of the day, we were the ones signing Thank You notes to those organizations who hosted us. We gave thanks, thanks for a day out of the ordinary, a day where we not only planted corn, but where we learned how it feels to help and make a difference. And we did it in distinct Andover style, helping each other and representing our school well.

5. Jake Roberts '10 worked at a warehouse. He started his day by sleeping through his bus departure. He said, "Despite the day's chaotic start it turned out to be a lot of fun and really rewarding."
6. Allie Hall '10 stayed on campus in Gelb for the Room to Grow project. She and other volunteers made fleece blankets. She said, "It was easier than I thought to make a warm cozy blanket."
7. Courtney King '10 sorted medical supplies at IMEC. She sorted items such as X-ray machines and catheters. She said, "I learned what a catheter was, and what it was used for, so then I made BJ Garry '10 sort them for the rest of the day."

8. Dylan Cahill '10 volunteered at Ironstone Farm. The farm is a physical therapy farm helping special needs kids develop muscles through horseback riding. He said, "The people on the farm were so thankful; we did something more important than we realized."

"I served ice cream at the Bread and Roses picnic. It's easy for us to just grab ice cream from Commons, but it's a real treat for all these people. I've forgotten how little things like that can mean so much to people. It made my day to make their days."
-Kristina Ballard '11

GROUNDWORK

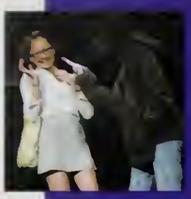

"We were wet and disgusting. You don't know how hard it is to pick up trash until it's wet. You also don't realize how candy wrappers, cigarettes, and plastic bags can add up. But I had a fun time and shared this experience with cool people. Lesson learnt: be careful of what to throw away because other people will have to sort it out." -Paul Chan '10

The Agenda: Zach Hobbs

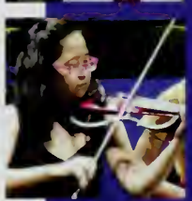

Assistant Director, Community Service

6:00 am: Find strongest caffeinated beverage at Starbucks. Purchase two.
7:00 am: First group leaves for Thompson Island.
8:00 am: It's still raining. Jumped in a puddle, and am wet now.
9:05 am: Neighbors in Need forgot gloves, Cradles to Crayons forgot lunches.
10:00 am: Rain + Standing + Thinking = Starving
12:00 pm: Food Project forgot lunches. They're on a farm, they can figure it out.
3:00 pm: Groups begin to return back to campus. Everyone is smiling!
4:00 pm: The Andover Waste Audit is finished. Despite dumpster diving all day, they all had fun. But they also smell.
5:00 pm: Last group is back. We survived NSD III.

plan B Grasshopper Night

"During 7 Layer Crunch Wrap Supreme's act, Duncan Crystal '10 suddenly decided to jump off of the really high platform over the drummer onto the stage. With the strobe lights, I couldn't really see what was going on. I just froze and thought I would have a heart attack, right then and there. That definitely wasn't supposed to happen, but the audience loved it." -Annie Li '10, Grasshopper NIght Stage Manger

"Our act ends with strobe lights, so I thought jumping would look so cool. I had been making subtle comments about jumping over the drumsets all week just to poke fun, but I never really had the intent of doing it until a few hours before the show. It was way scarier during the show because the strobe light made it difficult to tell when I was going to hit the ground. It was awesome though."

3. Eric Sirakian '10 and Calista Small '10 perform a skit called "Funeral Parlor." Eric really enjoyed working with Calista. He said, "Calista and I always gave each other a look after each performance- either a grimace or a smile- and then we laughed because we were always thinking the same thing."

Our skits would invariably be too long, and usually improvised, which upset the Grasshopper producers. But Andrew Schlager '12 and I believe that spontaneous comedy is always funnier than rehearsed comedy. We were probably extremely difficult to work with.

We had to fit our skits with the theme of 'Crimes and Misdemeanors.' The most fitting one was the Dr. Lecter scene. Andrew played Dr. Lecter, an alleged PA teacher, who bit me (vampire style) at the end of the skit. I lost five good shirts to the mercy of the stage blood that we used. Alas, the plight of the artist.

Being MC's for Grasshopper Night was indeed stressful and draining, but also extremely worthwhile. It was one of the most chaotic, challenging, and rewarding theatrical experience I've ever had. We performed five skits per show, with five costume changes in between, including getting in and out of a tuxedo twice. On Saturday night after the last show, I collapsed with exhaustion when I got back to my room. Finally, I could rest.

halloween 2009

After an early morning of Saturday classes and a long day of sports at Deerfield, Andover students rushed back to their dorms to get ready for one of the most anticipated nights of the fall.

Preparing for the Halloween dance is like preparing for battle. Planning begins months in advance, as students search their brains, the internet, and magazines for the most creative, outrageous, and festive costumes. And their work doesn't stop once they choose their costumes. They spend the week leading up to the dance begging day students to drive them to Joker's Wild, raiding their prefects' closets and doing serious damage to their parents' credit cards. On the night of, they crowd each others' rooms in preparation, sewing, cutting and piecing together the finished product. But, one may ask, why is so much effort put into Halloween?

One night a year, Andover students get to close their History 300 books, turn off their TI-84 calculators, and shut down their laptops. They get to become someone, or something, different; the pressure is off for one night. Their costumes becomes their new identities. For one brave lower, Colton Dempsey '12, Halloween meant zipping up a lime green full body jumpsuit. Colton admits, "When I am wearing the suit, I feel invincible. By day I am Colton, your typical PA student, but by night I am the Greenman, the fearless crime fighting vigilante."

3. Cherita Moore '12 and Chelsea Grain '12 pose in their costumes at the dance. Cherita said, "I thought my costume looked pretty good, just saying."

The residents of Burtt House, Katie Hess '11, Ashley Hess '11, Shannon McSweeney '11, Kendall MacRae '11, and Edith Young '11 dressed up as bees, alluding to the chapstick company Burtt's Bees. Kendall said, "It was such a creative idea. We knew we were going to be bees since August." Their house conselor, Ms. Curci, also dressed as a bee.

"Charlie Walters '10 and I wanted to do something extremely out there. Naturally, we went to a really sketchy costume place in Lawrence and bought the most feminine costumes we could find. We then went to Marshall's and bought women's leggings. Winning the costume contest was a huge rush, like getting into college times ten. The only downside was that once the costumes got sweaty, they started to smell really bad."

TRICK-OR-TREAT

exeter geek day

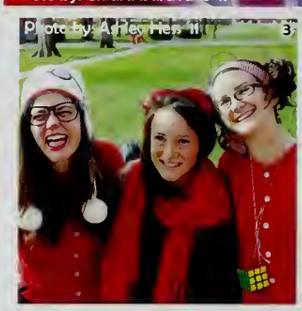

Who knew that we, collectively, owned so much red, the color we know as inferior to The Blue? Who knew that we had so much Exeter paraphernalia hidden in the back of our closets and owned ridiculously red spandex? SamPhil, Morse, Borden Gym, and Bulfinch were infiltrated by Exeter geeks, or rather, Andover students who chose to take on an alternate persona for the day. We didn't spend conference period meeting with teachers, but rather, we gathered on the steps of SamPhil, the emblem of Andover, as extreme Exeter geeks. We snapped photos, raved over each other's costumes, and conversed about quantum mechanics, as true geeks do. A sea of red covered our campus on this day, along with TI-84's, pocket dictionaries, thick framed glasses with poked-out lenses, sweater vests, and high socks. What makes this day so fun? It's our immense Big Blue pride that makes us talk in an annoying nasal voice and pull up our pants just a little bit higher.

3. Edith Young '11, Haley Scott '11, and Shannon McSweeney'11 pose in their Exeter gear. Edith and Shannon had been waiting all year for the chance to wear their onesies. "The best and nerdiest part of the onesie is the butt flap," Shannon said.
4. Jon Westling '12 and Adrian Stone '12 show off their Dungeons and Dragons apparel. Besides looking the part, the two acted like geeks all day long. "Every time a picture was taken I put on my worst smile and blinked," Jon said.

Constructing a Geek

"One of my freshmen in Rockwell came into my room (before 11 o'clock of course) and suggested that I could cut out some spectacles from cardboard. I glanced at the rest of my Bio reading and decided cardboard cutting it is! I taped some pencils onto my cardboard glasses to make 'em flashy for the lady-folk, then added an inhaler holder for practicality. I also fashioned a tool belt around my waist for the necessary objects I knew I'd need, like Windex, a stapler, a mug, anti-perspirants, Tylenol, a dictionary, a spoon, and bananas!"

"Having the captain of Hypnotiq, Caroline O'Sullivan '10, a Britney Spears instructional video, and Darren's Dance Moves was the perfect combination to create a pep rally skit that required as little of my dancing expertise as possible. A lot of people wanted to dress up like Britney, but seeing that no one has a Britney Spears, "You Drive Me Crazy" outfit or no one wanted to admit to owning one, wearing colorful shirts and our team warm up sweatpants was the next best option.

The dance was hilarious, and the best part was definitely Amanda Brisco '10. I made a deal with her before the pep rally that either she does the dance or she skips around everyone doing interpretational dance moves. In the end, her frolicking was perfect.

let's get a little bit rowdy

"Yes, yes, yes we do. We've got spirit how 'bout you?" We may no longer have fireworks or inappropriate jokes, but the Big Blue will always have spirit. Even when everything seems to be going wrong, from the threat of team skits getting cancelled to impending rainstorms to a last minute dash to find a missing Gunga suit, there is nothing that can stop the feeling that is BIG BLUE. It's inexplicable to an outsider who hasn't been in that ocean of hundreds of blue screaming fans – but if you've been there, you would know.

You would understand: shouting until you can't shout any more, making fun of Exeter relentlessly, singing along at the top of your lungs as the boys' soccer team shimmies to Jingle Bell Rock, still making fun of Exeter, throwing your class sign up high for the world to see, and, at last, rushing the field with the friends who have become your family.

Each of these moments makes up something inexplicably Andover. Nowhere else can you find the same Big Blue spirit that we have here. It is evident in closets filled to the brim with Andover accessories, in the hoarse voices after A/E, and in the class pride of the most intimidating seniors, the littlest freshmen, and everyone in between.

Maybe it was the loud music, Drumline, impressive team skits, and funky dance moves from the Blue Key Heads, but at some point during the pep rally, each and every member in the stands became a part of the tradition, part of the feeling that is Big Blue.

6. Kyle Leahy '10 and Noah LeGros '12 perform the boy's soccer skit. This year, they did a dance to Jingle Bell Rock from the movie "Mean Girls". "I had to teach the boys the dance, and it took them a while to figure out which way to move their hips when they walked. But in the end, they looked perfect," said Haley Scott '11, their manager.

There is no rivalry in high school sports that compares to that of Andover/Exeter. I came to Andover as a new upper with a vague idea that there was a strong love of competition against Exeter, but it was not until my first Andover/Exeter weekend that I realized what an intense tradition I had the privilege to partake in. To be a witness to the weekend is unbelievable, but to actually play in it is an experience that I will cherish forever.

Before the big day even came, everyone got psyched to compete and cheer on friends. Blue shirts, Andover sunglasses, pom-poms, horns, body paint, and anything blue or noisy was broken out for the weekend. Team skits and cheers at the pep rally got everyone ready to battle against our red rivals.

When that morning finally came, and I opened up the window blinds, I saw nothing short of torrential downpours. But, rain or shine, we were ready not only to play, but to win. The athletes were eager to play, and a little bit of rain didn't stop the true big blue fans. Everyone piled on to buses and we were on our way.

As I walked out on to the slippery turf, rain pelting my face, my uniform already soaked completely through, the adrenaline rush hit me. After all of our preparation, all of our practices, cheers, and hard work, this was the game that we had all looked forward to the most. I looked into the stands to see screaming blue and red fans under umbrellas and raincoats, braving the rain to cheer us on. Coming up the path, there were herds of spirited students ready to yell their favorite cheers led by the ever-enthusiastic Blue Key Heads. The energy that filled the air was contagious. As the whistle blew I knew that I would remember this day forever. The game was intense and fast, as all games against Exeter seem to be. But as we forget the wins and the losses, it is the memories of competition, incessant cheering, and friendships that we will always remember.

"Although at first the rain definitely dampened our moods (especially those of us who didn't bring an umbrella,) towards the end of the day the rain was a huge contributor to the intensity and electricity of the overall experience. Standing out there with my friends, soaked to my socks, banging trash cans, and screaming obscenities, I can safely say that I've never been prouder to go to Andover. These are the moments I will reminisce about while I'm at college and missing my friends from Andover. This was not my last fall A/E. No matter where I end up going to school, I will definitely be back next year. -Andrew Khang '10

"The night before, I bought markers and a shower curtain. I wrote "Luke - Sadie?" all in supersize permanent marker and it took forever! My original plan was to hang it from a window on the second floor of Commons, but the screens are bolted shut. The next best place was Day Hall. I had friends who live on the third floor, and they helped me put up the sign during conference period. When I saw Luke and he was smiling and said, 'It was a great way to ask, but you know I can't go to Sadie..." He and his friends kept the joke going awhile until he finally told me he was kidding and of course he'd go to Sadie with me. He thinks he's so funny."
-Shannon Burke '10

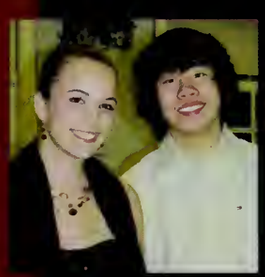

"During the black light dance, five members of SLAM each wore a shirt with a letter spelling out S-A-D-I-E. They stepped asking Garnet Hathaway '10 to Sadie for me. I wore a T-shirt with a question mark on it and then stepped out when they were done stepping. I was so nervous because there were so many things that could go wrong. But when I stepped out, I knew everything was perfect because he couldn't stop smiling. The best part was when he jumped on stage on gave me a giant hug, but I'm just glad he said yes."
-Courtney MacDonald '11

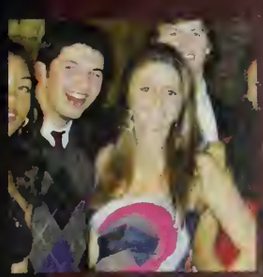

"I was at soccer practice, injured, standing on the track, when the whole girl's cross-country team ran past me. I quickly jumped out of their way, to be polite. After they passed, they all screamed my name, and turned towards me, forming a human circle of blue and black warm up suits around me. Then, Maggie Shoemaker '12 stepped out of the crowd, and said 'Will you go to Sadie with me?' I was impressed by their planning and coordination, and said 'I would love to.'" -Jon Westling '12

i did

I handed her a dinky little bouquet of these blue flowers, half of which I had painted silver, and just smiled at her. We're dating, so I wasn't expecting a "no". On that day, I had some free periods, and the idea just came to me. I could have planned it out better, but it seemed like a good idea. I walked to the flower store downtown. I bought the blue flowers, walked back to campus and painted half of them silver. Then I just waited for her class to end and invited her over to my dorm, where I handed her the flowers at the door. I think she liked them.

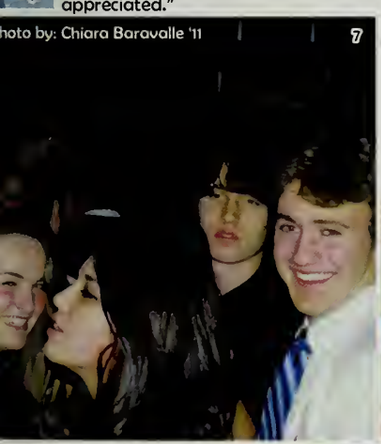

It's hard to dance in those kind of clothes for too long. It gets very hot and sweaty. Madi and I have this dance, just our own dance that we like to do. We made it up last year and now every time we go to a dance, people try to do it, but it doesn't really work for them. Maybe that's how we look doing it. I have no idea. Even if it looks dumb, we still like it. It's our own at least. I don't think many people can say that.

-Cameron Hastings '12

He had this huge smile stretched across his face, waiting for an answer, which was a yes. The dance itself was packed and unbearably hot. We had a really good time though. We have this crazy style of dancing. It's like a mix between the jitterbug and the salsa, I guess. Its odd; people always just stare at us, but we just danced our own little dance all night. Then he walked me home. I'd say it was a night I'll remember.

not just for science

The Gelb Center isn't just a place for cat dissections, Newton's Law of Motion, and chemical reactions. Once a year, it serves as a ground for the annual Gelb Dance and an unforgettable night of unrelentless dancing upbeat music. The ground pulsates as coats begin to pile up on top of each other in the Gelb hallways. The building, from afar, looks something like a kaleidoscopic greenhouse. Students in neon, sequins, and lacrosse jerseys, rocket up and down the corkscrew Gelb stairs. Students retreat to the first floor for a break and a nostalgic rush back to the '90s with The Backstreet Boys, the Spice Girls and Christina Aguilera. On the second floor, the bass undulates through the kids who jump together, head-banging and getting lost in the strobe lights. The techno floor appeals to the kids in their disco garb and Technicolor getups. Finally, on the third floor, the windows are coated with a moist fog. The kids cram into the rap/hip-hop floor together to form a huge mob of people from every dorm and corner of campus. The hazy dream of a night lives up to its hype, and illuminates the bitter Andover winter.

"The most memorable moment of the Gelb dance for me was that there were about 15 people or so who made matching shirts. These shirts had the picture of our friend Andrew Lee '10, or better known as Poon, and underneath, it said "POON SQUAD" and on the back "GET MONEY '10". Head of School Day

We've got it down to a science. Ask the Commons workers, check hockey rink times, call Admissions, get inside Mrs. Chase's head. Bogged down by papers, tests, sickness, and the realization that we have been wearing the same winter jacket and boots for much too long, we crave Head of School Day. It's only a day, really, and we're sleeping for half of it anyways. Mrs. Chase writes a haiku early in the term, reminding the students that "a lone hockey stick remains, hidden, seeking light!" Anticipating the day is almost half of the fun. Commons becomes packed for a week straight during dinner hours, and all eyes stay glued to Mrs. Chase and Mrs. Sykes. Colorful posters voice the students' plea for Head of School Day. Athletic teams spend hours ruling out the days where HOSD could fall, until they've eliminated every day in the month of February. This year came with a twist. Mrs. Chase was out of town and left numerous videos on Facebook, until finally at 4:38 pm on February 8, we saw on Facebook, the hand off of the hockey stick to Mrs. Sykes. The video garnered 271 'likes' and 43 comments. Mrs. Sykes made her way to Lower Right, when finally, the blue field hockey stick no longer sought light. And sure enough, we got our day on February 9, 2010.

"Head of School Day couldn't have come at a better time. During the Super Bowl, we saw a Denny's commercial offering a free Grand Slam meal on Tuesday. As soon as we saw the hockey stick, we knew where we were going the next day. The line was so long we had to wait outside for about twenty minutes, but my original Grand Slam meal was absolutely delicious, so it was well worth the wait."

ven better in the 100 days that we have left."

a word from Faiyad Ahmad '10

We have 100 days left, so lets make the most of them. Spend time with your friends, and get to know the people you wish you knew better. Make each one of these days special; look to do something new, exciting, and memorable every day. We're almost at the end of the race, we've come so far. Let's promise each other, right now, that we will all make it to the finish line, that we will all get our diplomas. It's a promise to me, to each other and to yourselves. Let's finish strong.

in the next one-hundred days, I will...

...finally finish my homework!
- Laura Wu

...make friends with Mrs. Rennie, figure out what the Comptroller does, and finally return all my old uniforms to Tony.
- Rob Stevens

...run in Andover Blue for the last time.
-Colleen Flanagan

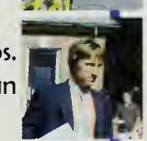

...stop drinking caffeine.
-Sophia Bernazzani

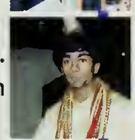

...make sense of my time here. Is that too nihilistic?
- Dominic Dejesus

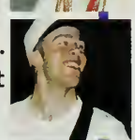

...grill a lot of burgers in the quads with the bros.
- Alec Bingaman

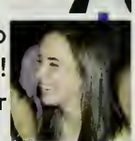

...cut classes to spoon.
- Ram Narayan

...have completed five years of high school.
- Sam August

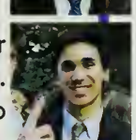

...act in a play, skip class, make a new friend, get into college, lay outside, laugh a lot, and GRADUATE!
- Lily Shaffer

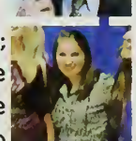

...mostly be in hibernation.
-Elliot Melaney

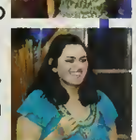

...set foot into a world no longer ruled by DCs, car permission and parietals.
-Bennett Carroccio

...stare into the sunrays; let time hover in a haze; shout 100 yays; constantly play,;and appreciate these people, and this place
-Hannah Bardo

...end one chapter and start another.
-Meredith Rahman

...stand under the yellow maples on top of the green grass, being held in the arms of the wind, and grasping my diploma in hand.

The admissions brochures told us there would be hundreds of clubs for us to join, and if there was a club that did not yet exist, we could start it. We thought it was too good to be true, until we finally matriculated at Andover, attended the Club Rally, and that admissions fact dawned upon us into truth.

We all join clubs for some reason. Whether it's for the good food, interesting discussions, or even, admittedly, content to fill college resumes.

You're not exactly sure when, but there comes a time when you have committed and sealed yourself wholeheartedly to an Andover club or organization. At times, you think: What did I get myself into?

The clubs we participate in, although they may exacerbate our work loads and set us further back in sleep deprivation, provide yet another foundation of the Andover experience. The hours we've spent, kids we've tutored, grants we've earned and pizzas we've ordered are engrained into our memory banks.

For some of us, the eerie basement of Morse has become a second home. After too much caffeine, covenants, and hours that breeze by, bleary-eyed but dedicated editors of student publications enjoy the satisfaction of seeing the finished printed product.

Or, it's the Bulfinch debate room, with the creaking wooden floors and dusty podium. It's here you've spent hours preparing your position and how to conquer the minds of those who dare to oppose you.

Some of us love hearing thundering applause at a curtain call in Tang or Steinbach theaters. Others dedicate their Tuesday and Thursday evenings to harmonize with their peers in orchestra and chorus. Another group of us love to relieve stress by discussing topics and meeting friends over hot chocolate in CAMD.

Wherever the venue, whatever the base, we dedicate the time that we should have been writing an English paper – due the next day – to the club or organization that we have made a part of us. Our work outside of the classroom is just as important as the theses we must construct and tests we must review for. For it is through these extracurriculars that we surprise ourselves. Our academic schedule is easy enough to predict, but there is no telling which signatures on sign up sheets at the Club Rally will turn into passions. The time, sweat, tears and heart we have dedicated into these places and for these causes is evidence that we have done something worthwhile at this place, and left a mark.

Every year, International Club co-hosts the Log Cabin Sleepover with Asian Society, and it's the only co-ed sleepover on campus with 55 of us all trekking up through the sanctuary in the coldest time of winter. We start off with the traditional group-choreograph-and-dance-off-competition and follow up with a plethora of pizza and junk food as well as movies, video games, board games, before we all collapse on the floor in our sleeping bags at 3am. It's the type of random crazy fun that exhausts you but refreshes you at the same time.

Andover can sometimes make us feel like machines. Our teachers drop assignment after assignment into our coin slots, and we then churn out essays, journals, and projects. We have turned our workloads into somewhat of a math problem, and we're constantly in search of how to jam a maximum amount of material into our heads over the shortest interval of time. The solution to that problem resembles the Impossible Triangle.

Some way or another, we get through term after term, with help from library cubicles, study sessions, all nighters, caffeine, and our brilliant minds.

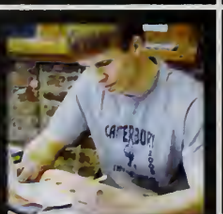

We work on a number system here. We must take English 100, 200, 300, History 100, 200, 300. We constantly add on more layers of equations and vocabulary to our growing foundations of knowledge. And we seem to always be in search of the perfect GPA, defined by multitudes of 6's and 5's.

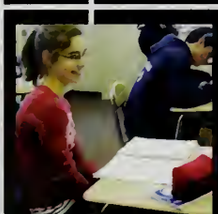

We've had our favorite classes and those that we struggled in. Academics at Andover define a large part of our time here. We did come here, first and foremost, to be educated. After the moving chalkboards of Gelb, constant haze of chalk dust in Morse, clanking heaters in Samuel Phillips, and pen etchings on Bulfinch desks, we come out with an unparalleled education. We got our share of good grades and bad grades, but most importantly, we realized what an education really is. It's being worldly, cultured, and responsible, an experience that cannot be quantified with a 6.

There have been times when you had that brilliant eye-opening class discussion. And you think, this is why you came to Andover, to be surrounded and inspired by the brilliance around you. Not a day goes by when we're not in awe of the faculty who have dedicated themselves to talking to us, showing us, interacting with us, and mentoring us. They have amused us with their funny jokes, amazed us with their insight, and inspired us to make connections. To the retiring teachers this year, thank for you scholarly footprint—your insight on an English book, specialized math textbooks, mentorship, coaching brilliance, and enlightening discussions. You have made your mark on this campus and in us.

1. Tommy Kramer '11 reads his play in Spanish class. His favorite line in the play is, "Subjuntivo!"
2. Julianna Wessels '12 laughs during a lively German class. She really enjoys her small class size. She said, "The small class enables us to have so much fun while still learning all the material."
3. Shimazu Sensei teaches a vocabulary lesson.
4. Tim Ghosh '10 and Justin Ku '10 perform a skit with the rest of the Chinese 400 class in the Chinese New Year show. Their class performed a rap and a skit. Tim said, "I was very impressed with Justin's ill rhymes. It was a travesty our class didn't win."
5. Taylor Perkins '12 helps Kyle Leahy '10 with classwork in German 200. On any given day, the class could be singing ridiculous German songs or eating German food. Kyle said, "The classroom environment is awesome; all the teachers and students are genuinely excited to be in class each period."
6. Audrey Adu-Appiah '10 practices writing basic characters in Japanese 100. This was her first time taking a non-Romance language. She said, "The first day was a litle nerve-wracking, but Ms. Shimazu made the transition much easier."
7. Ben Podell '11 and Jordan Bailey '11 find humor in their French class.
8. Mark Hanson '11 and classmates pay attention in Chinese class. They have to speak in Chinese the entire period. Mark said, "Learning new things can be difficult. My teacher has to act out the meanings of new words which can be really funny at times."

"More than things or activities, I will miss PA people—the many great colleagues and students who have enriched my time here, a wonderfully talented, diverse, and sometimes off-beat collection of individuals. I expect that if I am remembered, it will be for the high energy level of my teaching...My teaching attempts to go beyond dispensing facts and aims at making hearts beat a little faster. Many alumni have told me that they enjoyed the 'theatricality' of my classes. But "theater" is serious business, and there was always 'method to the madness.' "
-Mr. Dix

The Chinese Department always hosts a show on Chinese New Year, where each class must come up with a skit to present. One of my favorites this year was Chinese 520's "The Tea Over", a spoof of The Hangover. My Chinese 400 class performed a rap. I wrote the rap, and everyone really liked that we were able to fuse Chinese language with American culture.
-Sarah Onorato '11

I really struggle with having Russian first thing in the morning. This one time, I put my head down on my desk after a quiz because I was completely exhausted. Next thing I know, Mr. Svec put this cackling electronic witch next to my ear to wake me up...He's like that. -Marilyn Harris '11

1. Shannon McSweeney '11 enjoys an exiciting moment in Mr. William's History 300 class. She switched into Mr. William's class from Mr. Gurry's class. She said, "They have very different teaching styles. Having two great teachers has given me a better perspective of U.S. history."
2. Lincoln Bliss '10 and Zach Boyd '10 listen intently in class.
3. Shelby Centofanti '11, Carly Rauh '10, Jeremy Hutton '11, and Nathan Wagner '11 share a comical moment. They often have debates, simulating real situations that happened in history. He said, "Discussing the issues using the background and characters helped to better shape my view of history."
4. DJ Diesk '10 diligently takes notes in Econ class.
5. Theodore Drake '11, Kristin Faulkner '11, Janki Patel '11, and Chris Batchelder '11 pay close attention in Ms. Ainsworth's History 300 class. Interesting and engaging, class discussions center around American history as well as current events. Kristin said, "Being from Alaska, I'm forced to answer more questions about Sarah Palin than about American history."
6. Allan Yau '11 and Pat Brady '11 concentrate on a challenging assignment. Allan wrote his winter term History 300 paper on jazz music. He said, "The paper got me pumped for the infamous spring term paper. Bring it on!"

"Perhaps in my thirty years here I've left some prints. I wouldn't presume to speculate on what I've taught, my successes, my failures. But I've learned a ton, worked with wonderful people, and had lots of fun. Now the tide's coming in and my time for dancing on the beach is done. I'm grateful to all who've accompanied me." -Mr. Williams

"The class period before our history paper was due, Mrs. Ainsworth tried to gauge where we were our in terms of our papers. She first asked, "Who is ready for peer editing?" Several people raised their hands. Then she asked, "Who is fine with their papers but needs time to work on their paper alone?" Again, more people raised their hands. Finally, she got to her last question; "Who is in crisis mode, and will cry if I don't get to them first?" Amber Quinones'11 shot up her hand, while everyone in the class attempted to contain their laughter." -Julia Dean '11

"Once, we walked into History class and on the board it just said 'Find me in the Sanctuary' So we walked down there and called Dr. Shaw! Dr. Shaw! We finally saw him at the gate to the sanctuary. He gave us hot chocolate, and that was the whole class. It shows how creative Andover teachers can be." -Paul Turiano '13

7. Ambika Krishnamachar '11 and Will Adams '11 participate in a lively class discussion. Will's favorite part of the class is when they discuss current events. He said, "It's really interesting to see recurring themes from the past appear today."
8. Camerin Stoldt '12 conferences with Mr. Tipton in History 200. Mr. Tipton is a really funny and quirky teacher, according to Camerin. She said, "During one of our first classes, he ended up talking about a ridiculous Star Wars Holiday Special he had seen. It was hilarious as he described how horrible it was."
9. Amanda Howland '11 reads material for her American history class. She enjoys the class especially because we're in a time of immense political change. She said, "We can begin class discussing the rise of socialism in Europe and end by talking about what Stephen Colbert said last night."

1. Lowers pay attention in a Chem 250 class taught by Ms. Marino.
2. Mia Pecora '10 dissects a shark in bio class. Mia said, "We assigned roles to everyone in the group. I was the cardiologist, Alanna Waldman '10 was the OBGYN specialist."
3. Rohan Malhotra '11 and Peter Lee-Kramer '11 dissect a worm in bio class. This was Peter's least favorite part of bio, and he said "it was so gross. I hated seeing the worms' insides."
4. Andy Vailas '10 sits in psychology class, taught by Dr. Jackson. The class studied Freudian theory and mental disorders. Andy said, "the class was a lot harder then I had expected. We had a lot of work, but we also learned a lot."
5. Chiara Baravalle '11 reads the physics textbook. She said of her class, "I love the classroom atmosphere because my teacher presents a humorous side to physics, with jokes and anecdotes."
6. Seyoung Lee '12 takes notes in Physics 400. She has Ms. Odden, which has made physics really fun. "I used to hate physics, but Mrs. Odden's jokes make everything fun and easy to learn," Seyoung said.
7. Ms. Hilton teaches her Chem 250 class about reduction and oxidation reactions.
8. Noah Le Gros '12 helps Myles O'Neill '12 with a chemistry problem during group work. Noah said, "Group work is great. It's half the work."
9. Eric Yoon '11 dissects a frog in Bio 540. Dissecting was one of his favorite things about Bio. He said, "it was really informative to be able to see the insides of the frogs, especially because we were studying the systems that we were able to look at."
10. Mike Ma '10 and Joanna Wang '11 dissect a worm in Bio 540. Mike felt bad for the worm, as it kept squirming around. "But, in the name of education, we battled on," he said.

"Before Dr. Stern came into the class one day, Maggie Shoemaker '12 wanted to see if he would notice that she was in the room if she hid under the table. She hid under the table, and we covered it with jackets and backpacks. Not only did he not notice she was there for the whole class period, she got out of the classroom without him noticing after the bell had rung!" -Collin Benedict '12

"In Organic Chemistry, Mr. Maqubela calls us all brothers and sisters. Our motto for the class was 'Spread the charge, spread the love.' I think I learned a lot about life and chemistry in that class." -Jack You '10

"In Chem 250, Andrew Schlager '12 and I didn't ever really understand the labs. So, instead of doing them in class, we would pretend that we were smarter than everyone else and that we knew exactly what we were doing. We would pretend to finish before everyone else, and then stay after every day during conference to ask our teacher what was actually going on. The whole class thought we were jerks because we bragged about being smart, but the truth was, we really didn't know what was going on!"- Kiki Somers '12

"Being in the classroom is great fun, and I hope I have helped kids to understand sometimes complicated ideas, to feel encouraged, and to become better problem solvers. In my other classroom, the baseball diamond, I've been very fortunate to work with some very fine coaches and a lot of terrific players. Striving to be champions in sports can be important, but even more important is to be a champion as a student, as a husband or wife, as a parent, and as a member of the community. And to become a champion, it's not good enough to talk about it, you have to be about it." -Mr. Cline

"I was so fortunate to have Mr. Cline as my very first math teacher when I came to PA as a new lower. To this day, he's still one of the best math teachers I've ever had. He made me feel as if I were the one 'discovering' the math, guiding me gently towards each leap of knowledge, instead of just teaching 'the way it is done.' I don't know if he is aware of this, but he made me interested in math and made me love math, even if I may be frustrated with it on a day to day basis. As cheesy as it sounds, he made me feel special, not just another name on a test, and he seemed genuinely proud and happy for me when I was proud and happy. He's been such a wonderful teacher to me and to so many other lucky students, and I wish him his best." -Sophia Jia '10 mathematics

"There are three boys who have been in every math class of mine for the past year and a half. We call ourselves the Dream Team, and we each have nicknames from the Boston Celtics. We used to even write those names on the top of group worksheets." -Kerry Lanzo '11

1. Kerstin Brolsma '11 and Migeul Montana '11 collaborate on a math problem. They are in Mrs. Green's precalculus class. Kerstin said, "I don't think our class is every quiet, even on test days. We always burst out laughing at Mrs. Green's jokes."
2. Pia Aehnlich '10 pays attention in Mr. Alonso's class. "Once, I had the funniest test in my life. All the word problems were about Mr. Alonso himself. We had to calculate the rate of change of the volume of a balloon with his face on it."
3. Lane Lytle '11 contemplates a math problem. She had a great group of people in her Math 340 class. She said, "My class has made math better than I ever thought it could be."
4. Liz Lavin '10 listens intently to Mr. Alonso in Senior Calc. She really enjoys Mr. Alonso as a teacher. She said, "Sometimes in the middle of class, he would put on OJ Simpson-esque black gloves which would really freak us all out."
5. Ansley White '10 participates in a class discussion. She finds Mr. Alonso's math lectures interesting and humorous. She said, "One day, I was asking what the derivative of something was on my paper and all Mr. Alonso wrote was 'POOP.'"
8. Jackie Lender '11 works on a problem set. She is in Mr. Washburn's calculus class. She said, "I'm in first period, so sometimes it's a bit of a struggle to get through."
9. Olivia Howell '11 laughs while watching a video in class. They have traditional YouTube Fridays in Ms. Green's calculus class. She said, "It definitely keeps math very interesting."
10. Avery Stone '10 laughs in Senior Calc class. She said, "We may not be the most mathematically inclined, but we share a lot of laughs."
11. Denzil Bernard '11 presents his work on the blackboard. He finds Mrs. Green's BC Calculus class to be fun, engaging, and truly unique. He said, "While we are usually hard at work, Mrs. Green always takes time in class to tell us about her kids latest ventures or inquire about our own lives at Andover. Who would think that calculus class could ever be interesting?"
12. Nick Kearns '11 reviews a worksheet.

1. Madison Harding '10 and Charlie Gretsch '10 take notes during Dr. Avery's lecture. Charlie said, "To learn to stand back and approach life critically and philosophically was the greatest lesson I learned at Andover."

2. Lowers listen to the lessons of the book club.

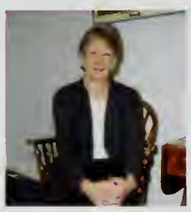

3. Grace Thornton '10 looks over her project during Brad Hus's class. The topics of this class are relevant current issues. She said, "This class will prepare us to tackle these issues with a deeper understanding of the possible repercussions of our actions."

4. Dr. Avery commands attention of his class.

5. Mr. Hodgson shares his wisdom with his students.

6. Whitney Ford '10 and Wesley Meyer '11 read about Plato. They are in Mr. Hodgson's Law and Morality class. She said, "Plato was really difficult to understand at first, but Mr. Hodgson made things much easier to understand."

7. Peter Bang '11 and Andrew Lee '10 take notes during class. Peter said, "Dr. Avery provokes interesting discussions about the elements we must think about in environmental issues."

"What has mattered most to me about Andover is that it is a place where I am never bored. I am surrounded by students and colleagues who make me think and laugh. Every day contains at least one surprise. As a teacher, my concern has been not so much the knowledge acquired, but the cultivation of certain arts and habits: for the habit of attention and active listening, for the art of expression and the art of entering quickly into another person's thoughts, and for the habit of careful work and mental courage." -Mrs. McCaslin

theater

1. Joanna Wang '11 goes over lines before Oedipus Rex rehearsal in Tang. At Andover, she has gotten involved in both acting and teching. She said, "I began as an actor, and started to do tech so I could appreciate the finer things of theatre and to and behold! I've discovered a whole different form of art."

2. Many dedicated dancers perform in this year's Dance Open, a showcase of completely student-choreographed dances.

3. The fall term Theater 520 class perform The Who's Tommy.

4. Steph Liu '11 makes a costume for the Oedipus Rex production. She made a large hooded robe for the blind priest. She said, "Costume design was a new and exciting experience for me since I had no prior sewing or designing experience."

5. Sam Orwin '11 goes over his lines before Theater 520 Oedipus Rex rehearsal in Tang. He loves how the director treats the students like professional actors. He said, "Every night, we leave each day, with a sense of accomplishment, which only pushes us to work harder & the director leads a workshop for beginner theater students."

7. Adam Chen '10 rehearses for a short student-directed play. She likes Theater at Andover because it is so accessible. She said, "It's a great way to bring people with no previous knowledge in totally different things together because getting stuff done."

Theater 520 this term has been a party. Literally. Half of our rehearsal time was spent joking around, laughing, playing... it's been good. (Don't worry though - we got work done!) In Oedipus Rex, the chorus split up into three groups (we call them PODS) and we're under this fabric with cut out holes for arms and heads. The pods all named ourselves. I'm a part of Pod Heart, and we're better than iPod or Podophiles. During our first dress rehearsal, everyone went ballistic with the face paint! Adam Tohn '10 had fish scales coming off his body, Julian Danziger '11 looked like a hillbilly, and I was ready to jump into battle with all my war paint." -Shefali Lohia '10

1 Mr. Wells explains the components of a photograph. After being at Andover for 38 years, he bids goodbye to his students this year.
2 John Chen-Lorenzo '10 creates a clay sculpture. He said, "Sculpting was a welcomed break because I was constantly drawing 2D art to communicate powerful messages about the world."
3 Kristy McLeod '10 works on her wire sculpture. She made a wire structure of a lot of wire circles with a ping pong ball on the inside. She said, "I wanted to create disorderly order."
4 Park Chan '10 makes a spherical sculpture in class. After taking many art classes, he has felt inspired by the Andover art faculty. He said, "The best part about any art class here is that the teachers can enable their students to produce amazing art."
5 Katie Hess '11 sorts through photos in her Art 250 class. She learned how to use Photoshop. She said, "Now for my friends' cards I'm constantly photo-hopping their faces into funny pictures. It's so great."
6 Taylor Dortona '12 and Madeline Silva '13 test out the cameras in Photo I class. They learn how to load film and develop prints. Taylor said, "The class is awesome- our only homework is just to take pictures of things that inspire us!"
7 Sasha Sullivan '11 completes a project for her Drawing I class. She has never taken a formal drawing class before, but she has already loved drawing. She said, "Drawing is so fundamental to any type of art-making."

Listening to random Gregorian Chants in Music 330 put me in that "uplifting" mood . I'll remember when our teacher Mr. Lorenco said,'Screw the syllabus... we're watching Amadeus!' " -Alex Smith '12

"Rohan Malhotra '11 and I were filming for an art project in the stacks of the library. Later, when we looked through our footage, we found a lot of shots of this creepy librarian prowling around trying to hunt us down." -Jake Roberts '11

"In my architecture class, during final deadline, we started playing games and telling jokes as we waited for the glue to try. All of our games helped me get through the tedious moments building models. Everyone was always laughing or smiling. It was a great class." -Shelby Centofanti '11

"Cliché or not, we love each other, whether it's gathering around our watering hole—the fridge—or cramped in the small hallway, just talking about knives, ghosts, squirrels, and Barbra Streisand." - Demetrius Lalanne '11, Blanchard House

Fourteen. That's the number of grilled cheese sandwiches that Vincent D'Andrea '10 ate in a single sitting one winter night. Others have tried to best this gustatory challenge, but none have succeeded. Mr. Zaeder's famous grilled cheese munches, and the gluttonous contests that ensue, are as much a part of Bishop Hall as are the grungy blue carpet and malfunctioning fire alarms. When Vince recounts his triumphant act, sandwich by sandwich, we all roll our eyes— we've heard this story before—but it still gets a rise out of us. And that's what dorm living is all about.

Everyone in the dorm knows each other, knows the nuances, and knows the lore. Everyone is united by the common experience. The dorm is where craziness erupts, where epic pranks are pulled, and where the best memories are made. Where else can a study session turn into an impromptu rap battle, or a meeting into an all out water balloon war? My dorm is way more than my home- it's the home that I share with my best friends. It's a place where I can be myself and where everyone else is their self as well. Amidst the chaos that Andover can sometimes be, the dorm is constant, always full of friends and always a place to kick back and relax. Classes, Commons, The Den, sports fields, club meetings, school dances and shows—all of those are great—but for me, the dorm is where it's at.

four-year roommates

riley gardner & maggie law

our secrets:

"Riley listens to Disney music like it's her job, and has Disney movies on in the background while she does her work. She's also recently obsessed with Twilight. Sometimes when she says she's going to bed, I know she's reading it under her covers."- Maggie

"Maggie has so many stuffed animals on her bed: Eeyore, a giant yellow duck, and a giant teddy bear. She also has corny signs in her room that say things like "Dream," "Faith," or "I love shoes." In the winter, she sleeps in full sweat suits (sweatpants, shirts, and socks)." - Riley our memories:

"The first night Riley and I roomed together during freshman year, we sat on the floor of our room while Riley played 'Ring the Alarm' by Beyonce. We had only known each other for a day, but we got up and started a dance party, the first of many. We now have them every night we return from vacations." - Maggie

"Freshman year after lights out, I would jump into her bed, and we would talk for hours until she started to fall asleep, and then I would go back to my own bed. We started that the first week of freshman year, and to this day I am still in her room most nights before bed." - Riley why we're roommates:

"She always has chocolate granola bars and Diet Pepsi, and a really comfy bed. But mostly, I just love coming home every night to my best friend." - Maggie

"I am on the messy side and am easily distracted. She is clean and focused on work. I can't explain our dynamic, but it just works. I don't necessarily need to be with her or see her every minute, but the comfort of having my best friend in the next room means so much." -Riley helen lord & avery stone

our secrets:

"Helen hates any sort of sound while she's trying to sleep! She has a fan that blocks out sound now, so she can't hear music or sounds from my room. When she didn't have the fan, she made me talk on the phone in my closet at night, and she went to bed really early too." - Avery

"Avery changes clothes like five times a day! She always changes her outfit at least three times before leaving the dorm and changes into sweatpants in the room, even if it's only for five minutes. One time, a few friends and I et how many outfits she would wear in one day... I think it was five?" - Helen ur memories:

At the beginning of freshman year, Helen's dad called her room, and she told me to pick it up, so did. I asked who it was. A man with a low voice on the other line said, "Ham," and I asked, "Um, ho are you?!" Slightly annoyed, he replied, "Helen's father! Who is this?!" I didn't know his name was ambleton, and immediately threw the phone at Helen." - Avery

During Freshman year, Avery and a few friends decorated my room with post-its with different inside kes and hid them in every place imaginable. I continued to find them throughout the year and even und one in my suitcase a year later. Also, we have amazing Friends marathons. Freshman year, we ould watch Friends after lights-out all the time, and we continue to do this." - Helen

the playbook

Sports at Andover unite us and inspire us. Andover students from around the world, with very different backgrounds and plans for the future, come together over seemingly insignificant items like a ball, a puck, or a disc. But athletics are a vital part of every Andover student's daily schedule; they provide the comfort of a routine and an escape from the rigor of our academic careers. For a few hours, we can forget homework, essays, and tests and focus on the shriek of Coach's whistle, the encouraging words of teammates, and the sheer joy of making a great play. One of my favorite aspects of Andover sports are the long, leg-numbing bus rides to away games. My teammates with whom I shared those trips have become my best friends through talking, laughing, and sharing our experiences, in sports and in life. It's a safe bet that whether you're a varsity athlete or somebody brand-new to a sport, you've made a friend through Andover athletics that you might not have met otherwise.

As one of my coaches told me, we focus less on the end results of winning and losing at Andover. Instead, we focus on the processes it takes to arrive at those results. This could mean making small adjustments in how we play, but it could also mean adjusting our mental approach to the game.

By focusing on the processes it takes to succeed, Andover produces outstanding teams every year. The 2009-2010 season was no exception. In addition, we renewed our traditional rivalry with Exeter on a rainy, frigid November afternoon, and Girls Field Hockey, Boys Cross Country, and Girls Volleyball took home victories against our archrival.

Andover athletics teach us to win with grace and lose with humility. We learn to pour our hearts into striving for perfection, with the understanding that it can take a lifetime to be perfect. But most of all, we learn to have fun.

The 2009 football team experienced it all this year. We had wins, loses, and a tie. We had injuries, illness, and game cancellations. Despite all those adversities, we were still able to come together as a strong team like one big family.

The team had some really strong wins this year with the biggest against Deerfield. Our offense really shinned this game and we were able to dominate the run and pass game. Our defense's best game came in the tie against Choate which went to overtime, highlighted by the defense's touchdown and some red zone stands. Although the loss against Exeter was a real disappointment for us, it still didn't break our team bond which is testament to our strength. We had a great group of returners who had been playing together for three years, and we were lucky to have a bunch of new guys to join the team who really added to our strength. Our team had a diverse group of personalities, and the locker music flowed from hip-hop to country. The different players and coaches made for an enjoyable season and I think we'll all remember the 2009 season for such a great team and a great time.

We walked off the field the first day of tryouts wondering what this season was going to be like. While most of our players were returners, we welcomed five new girls onto the team. Even at the very beginning, everyone meshed well together, both on and off the field, but no one could have predicted the greatness that PAFH 2009 would be. As the season progressed, our offense scored a record number of goals, and our defense only allowed four.

Our win-loss record is only a small part of what has made this season so special. Never have we played for a team that worked so hard for one another and trusted one another like PAFH did. No matter where the ball traveled to on the field, every girl knew that they would have a teammate supporting her. What will we miss the most? How can we even begin to describe it – chest bumps, team dinners, who-do-voodoo, "don't settle," the kissy thing, the case game, team sleepovers, blackout psyches, bandana days, locker room dance parties, dangerous football cleats, our rendition of "Beat It," Sadie set ups, our wonderful home turf, and our amazing coaches. When we're no longer at Andover, we will all look back on PAFH 2009 with so much love. 19 into 60 will always hold true in our hearts.

Andover / Exeter

" I remember saying to Kyleigh right before the whistle blew for the first half, "this is it, I can feel it!" And about 30 seconds later we went on to score." - Kellie Walsh '11

"It had been raining for the entire game and everyone was freezing cold, but that day has become one of my favorite memories of the season." - Catherine Anderson '12

"It was the best feeling in the world when we finally beat Exeter! After losing to them two years in a row in over time, beating them in the rain 3-0 was the best revenge." - Shannon Mcsweeney '11

"It was pouring rain and we played our hearts out. After we won the game I cried so hard. I cried because that meant that the season was almost over, because we had put our absolute everything into the game, because this is the best team that I had ever played for, because I loved this team more than anything, because it was my last Andover-Exeter weekend, and because we had just played the best game of our season!" - Kyleigh Keating '10

"Do it for the guy next to you. This is what we've been training so hard for all year."
From Casco, Maine to Andover to Loomis-Chaffee, this team stayed together through it all. Of our greatest moments was this incredible come back. The returners came back from a six point deficit to win 8-7. As a team, we had our rough patches, but it was moments like those that made us a team. The guys on this team stuck up for one another, and we picked each other up. We learned a lot about soccer, life, friendship and riddles along the way. There was nothing this team went through that went unacknowledged. We learned our lessons early in the season, and grew quickly from there as players and as a team. Our Andover-Exeter game was unlike anything else. Although the 0-0 tie was anticlimactic, no player on our team will ever forget the game. Buckets of water poured from the sky, three-foot puddles dominated the field and everything on it.

In the end, the puddles won, and making the playoffs was on all our minds. Making the playoffs as the number three seed was a great accomplishment that exemplified all of our hard work, and was definitely a well-deserved opportunity.

5. Teammates congratulate Mike DiFronzo '11 after scoring a goal. The support everyone had for each other on the team this year was amazing. Mike said, "Riddles, dinners, Harry Potter, and bus rides helped lead us to success on the field.
6. Co-Captain Garnet Hathaway '10, gets a quick pass off to his teammate against a Taft opponent. Garnet had a consistently successful senior season, netting a career high amount of goals. When asked where he found his inspiration, he said, "A wise man once told me to, 'Tilt the field.' That man is Michael L. DiFronzo."
7. Kyle Leahy '10 jumps to head the ball to a teammate during the Taft game. He improved drastically this year, transforming into an aggressive player. He said, "Coach Carr always said 'Front Studs all the time.' This fighting mentality helped us go 8-1-1."

Spencer Macqaurrie '10 is a senior on the team, and lead the team from the back of the field as the starting goalie. With a four-game shut out streak, Spencer impressed his teammates with his tireless work ethic and motivational personality. About the season, Spencer said, "It was a great way to end my soccer career here at Andover, and I couldn't have asked for anything more from an experience."

girls' soccer

Back in September, we knew we had a great team. Lead by a large senior class, our team had the depth and strength and was virtually incomparable throughout New England. But with low scoring, we had more ties than wins midway through the season. Undaunted, the team moved forward to achieve our ultimate season goals. Each girl persevered and sacrificed whatever she could to drive her team forward. "Whatever it takes."

Andover/Exeter weekend seemed dismal; the season was caught in tandem, being potentially cut short by Exeter's cancellation of our game. Yet, on Saturday night, the girls knew that their season was not over; they were placed as the seventh seed team in the New England Class A playoffs. Inspired by Coaches Joel, Scott, and Marino "to fry bigger fish," Andover was matched against the perennial powerhouse, 2008 New England Champions, the second seed, Nobles and Greenough. But under the lights, in our last home game of the season, the team had confidence and was bent on playing a flawless game. In a long and well-fought battle, GVS beat Nobles 1-0, and moved on to play the third seed, Brooks School. After another 1-0 win, Phillips Academy faced the top seed Loomis Chaffee in the final championship game. For the second time in the past three years, with grit and determination, Andover beat Loomis 1-0 to capture the New England Class A Championship. Perfect.

5. Courtney Macdonald '11 kicks the ball downfield. Known for executing amazing defensive plays, she helped lead the team towards a championship. She said, "We were the only team to go into playoffs with a 7-1-7 record, but we're also the only team that left the tournament with a 3-0 record and a championship trophy."
6. Meaghan Doherty '10 tries to steal the ball. She has been playing soccer all of her life. She said, "playing for Andover has been my favorite soccer experience by far."
7. Piper Curtis '13 manuevers the ball. The practices, psyches, and games were the highlight of her fall term. "And winning the championship made the whole experience even better," she said.

spotlight on: Alex Farrel

Alex Farrel completed her fourth year on the varsity soccer team this year, having won the New England championship twice. As goalie and captain, Alex supported the team relentlessly, on and off the field. About the season, she said "This past season was by far my favorite season on the soccer team. The team progressed so much over the season; we were seated seventh, and we still won the championship. Our team proved that our team can truly do 'whatever it takes.' Leading the team all the way to the championship was an amazing way to end my soccer career at Andover."

1. Tim McLaughlin '11 runs with ease during a meet. He had worked hard all season to run his best during races. He said, "I remember how good we all got at pushups."
2. Kian Ivey '12 pushes himself to the finish line. His drew his motivation from his coaches, teammates, and himself. He said, "We always had friendly competition during practices, which we used to our advantage run our best times during races."
3. Tim McLaughlin '11, Chris Batchelder '11, James Hamilton '12, Matt Appleby '11, Nick Kearns '11, and Kian Ivey '12 lead the pack. The Andover squad had an undefeated regular season. James said, "The first mile is to see what the competition is like, the second to see if they could keep up with the pace, and the last mile is when we pushed it home."

4. Tim McLaughlin '11, Nick Kearns '11, and Renat Zalov '11 push their limits in a race. Nick loved running side by side with his teammates. He said, "the cheering spectators are great, but more than a couple of occasions, I was helped through a tough stretch of a race by a teammate."
5. Renat Zalov '11 powers himself for the home stretch. He loves home races at Andover. He said, "nothing feels better than knowing you have your peers cheering for you as you cross that finish line."
6. Matt Appleby '11 keeps pace with several Choate competitors. This was the best season of cross country that he has ever had. He said, "our team this year was perfect in every way: the people, the times, the friendship, and the teamwork."

boys' cross country

fast times

Throughout the season, I saw my runners do exactly what was expected of them. I saw each and every one of them clench their teeth and charge through a hill. I am so happy that I led a team that cared about one another. Every time we toed the starting line, I knew that our last runner would be charging for the front of the pack, and our runners up front would try their best to pull everyone along with them. Our strength was in our pack: our desire to have the first to the last runner be a star. This year, I was given an opportunity to lead lions, betrayed only by their slight appearances, but giants in every way that mattered. Even though we trained to win races, the things that I will take away are the times when we encouraged each other onward, the times when we challenged each other and laughed as obstacles were toppled, times where we piled up on the lawn to stay warm before practices, and the electricity in the air when we lined up with each other in the frigid rain, knowing that in seconds we would be wishing the temperature was even colder. Our amazing coaches always had our best interests at heart; they always wanted us to be the best we could be. It was an honor to lead this team, to learn from the runners and the coaches, and to count the miles as they passed by.

This year's cross country season was amazing. With a large group of '09 no longer part of the team and Coach Lang on sabbatical, many people had doubts about the season, but the team was united and had a lot of fun and success—eventually winning the NEPSTA Division I Interscholastic Championship for the 5th year in a row in both the JV and Varsity races. We could not have done it without the amazing leadership and guidance of Coach Hession and Coach Gupta. The team pulled together throughout the season and pushed each other towards unbelievable time drops and success, often times running in packs and finishing races together. We had the advantage of a home season, only running away meets at Boston's Codfish Bowl, Deerfield, and Interschols at NMH. Our team overcame all odds in the rainiest, muddiest possible conditions at Interschols and eventually win, defeating nine other teams, including St. Paul's, who had beat us in the dual meet a few weeks prior. It was by far the proudest moment of my Andover career, and I know that it is something that every girl on the team will always remember.

1. Emily Adler '12 runs on pace at a flat part of the Andover course. Psyches always helped her to get ready for excellent race day times. "The monochrome psyche is always the best!" she said.

2. Katherine Bulger '11 muscles her way towards the finish line. Inside jokes helped the team to run an amazing season that, in the end, was all about fun. She joked, "Underwear is overrated... shorts liners fo lyfe!"

3. Caroline Gezon '10 maintains a steady position during a race. As captain of the team, she helped motivate everyone to another winning season. "Ten years from now when I look back on my Andover experience, I will be most proud of winning Interschols for the fifth year in a row," she said.

4. Shannon Adams '12 keeps a consistent rhythm during a run on her home course. With Coach Lang on sabbatical, the girls had to unite to void a noticeable gap. Shannon said, "Though no one could ever replace a coach like Coach Lang, Coach Becki did an amazing job this season."

5. Jessica Siemer '10 powers through a tough part of the course. Throughout the season, Jessica used the strength of her teammates to keep her on track during races. She said, "A funny thing happens when you get enough crazy people together who actually enjoy inflicting 5 kilometers of discomfort, 10 hill repeats, and 35 miles on themselves weekly... We're a family and with the wings on our feet we just can't be beat!" she said.

Two years ago, we did not qualify for the season-end tournament. Last year we made it to the B tournament and even went so far as to win it. So, what will we do this year? This was what I asked the team before this season started, and I have come to realize that they have answered marvelously. Tenacity, dedication, hard work, and nobility – this team has epitomized the true meaning of each of those words. There is no doubt in my mind, that not a single team in the league has worked as hard as we did, and it has been a pleasure, an honor, leading them as captain. Our team had movement. Our team had communication. Our team had explosiveness. And, our team had a conspicuously bold character. Although the season did not turn out in our favor, I am extremely proud of the way we played this year: defeating all four single-encounter opponents, challenging the two-time defending champions in overtime, and giving our final opponent the game of their lives. No, the season did not turn out the way we had hoped; it turned out better. Andover Water Polo was a young team this year, and what was accomplished this year was growth. I believe that Andover Water Polo will continue to grow and succeed.

Our team this year was filled with depth and talent, and we've become close friends on and off the court. Through swine flu, torn retinas, and heavy Andover workloads, we've supported each other through it all. We always have a great time together at practices, on long bus rides, and during games. We try our best to transfer our energy and spirit to the court. We have had a great season this year, we have a passionate team filled with veterans hungry for the championship title and newbies who have made their presence known with impressive drive and talent. Although we play hard and love to win, we love our team more. Volleyball is a team sport as we feed off each other's energy, creating such a strong bond. We keep each other motivated at all times, whether it be calming a teammate down, or picking a teammate up with a reassuring pat on the back and a aggressive huddle pep talk. Most importantly we try our best not to take the game too seriously, which is why every practice we jam out to Viola's playlist (we love us some Justin Bieber), practice our handshakes, trash talk in Borat accents, and generally just have a good time. We have each others' backs on and off the court and that is what has made all the difference this season.

1. Melissa Yan '10 sets the ball for Meghan McCafferty's '10 powerful hit. Together, the co-captains made a powerful setter and hitter pair. Melissa said, "The best part about being a setter is getting in tune with your hitters, so that when they make an amazing kill, I feel like I'm right there with them hitting the ball."

2. Kemi Amurawaiye '11 and Meghan McCafferty '10 jump to block an opponents strike. Laughing during games and practices help the girls come together as a team. Kemi said, "We had a great season and had so much fun while we were at it."

3. Alexi Bell '13 jumps to tip the ball over the net. The only freshman on the roster this year, Alexi was a vital asset to the team's successful season. She said, "I was dubbed 13, but most of the time I didn't feel like a freshman, cause everyone on the team was so great."

4. The team links arms in a circle for a pre-game talk from Coach Beckwith. The volleyball team had to battle through several setbacks this season. "We had to overcome a lot of adversity. but each game, we always pulled it together and played as a team," said Viola Rothschild '10.
5. Jamie Shenk '12 and Viola Rothschild'10 watch as teammate Alexi Bell '13 spikes the ball over the net. 5. Garnet Hathaway '10 shields the puck from opponents. His last season playing at Andover was a memorable one. He said, "I wish the season never ended."

The one phrase that could be heard in the Boys Varsity Hockey locker room throughout the season was "Margin for Error." After a tough loss to Salisbury in the New England playoffs last year, the Boys Varsity Hockey team entered the 2009-2010 season with high expectations for success. The addition of freshmen and new lowers brought youth to the team while the rising seniors and new PG's attempted to fill the void left by those who have graduated. With a young team, many of our players lacked experience and needed time to adjust to the speed of prep school hockey.

Our margin for error this season was small. Every injury, sickness, or bad play on the ice had great repercussions. At the Flood Marr Tournament over Christmas, however, we proved to everyone in the prep school league that we had the heart to fight through all of our setbacks. Although we came up short in the championship game of the tournament, our wins against Westminister and Nobles became the pinnacle of our season, proving to ourselves that we could play with the best.

The games following Flood Marr became a roller coaster of great performances and not so great ones, but through it all we grew closer together. From our on-ice wins against Deerfield in the last minute of the game and against Belmont Hill on the road, to our off-ice adventure of getting dressed in the trailer outside Proctor, the 2009-2010 season is definitely one that I will never forget.

Coming into this season, it was clear that PA Puck '09-'10 would have its challenges, in terms of injuries, many new players, and the loss of last season's large graduating class. Although this season wasn't ideal in terms of wins and losses, the group of girls on the team this year has been great. We've stayed in every game and never given up. We've also had a lot of fun together - at the Taft tournament, on buses to away games, in the locker room, during practice, at team brunches and dinners, and everywhere else. This year's team has come so far as a group, and virtually every member has improved on the ice. A huge highlight of our year was beating last year's New England champion, Nobles, 3-2 at their rink. We came together and played a great game against them even though they were expected to win.

This year, we had a large age range on our team. However, we still managed to feel like a family more than a team. My team has redefined my belief in team chemistry. We came together at the beginning of the season and even with our differences, but still managed to pull together to have a great season. Like all famous sports teams, we have had our ups and downs, but at the end of every game we knew it didn't matter because we would always find love and support in one another. Win or lose, we had a great run, and I know that this is a team I will never forget. While maintaining a serious demeanor in front of our opponents, we always had a good time letting loose in practices doing the Dragon Drill or the Crikey Walk. As much as we like to have fun, we also ensured that we always held the same intensity that we would in a game. This made for not only a fun team, but an extremely skilled and motivated one. Now we will all be going our separate ways in school or life, but it is teams like the one we had this year that prepare a person for any future endeavors. Being on a talented team such as this one has taught us all important life skills such as teamwork, commitment and cooperation. Thanks to this team, these are skills that I will keep with me for the rest of my life and for that I am so thankful. Good luck to all the girls and thanks again for an unforgettable season!

boys' basketball

This year's basketball team was defined by the personalities of the players on the team. For example, one player spent the majority of his time finding free gifts for his teammates. One kid was lucky enough to get a box of 100,000 napkins. Another got a free bundle of magazines. I was lucky enough to get a six-pack of diapers from Costco. Playful, harmless pranks like those sum up the 2009-2010 Andover basketball team who should be remembered as a loose, close-knit group that enjoyed their time together.

This team was especially meaningful for me as our core of seniors (Tom Hamel, Tyler Bond and myself) played our last season together. We have had successes since our freshman year on Junior Varsity, through our sophomore year on Varsity until now. And we have also grown as friends off the court.

If there is anything I will remember from this team, it will be the extraordinary team dynamic. I have never been a part of a team with such an amazing cast of characters. The blend of older players, post-graduates ,and the underclassmen helped create a positive environment, which made practicing and playing easier. Although we did not have as much success as I would have hoped, I would not trade the experiences I had with this team for the world.

Behind the Plays

"The best relationship on the team hands down had to be between Ryan Hartung '12 and Will Winkenwerder '10. The dynamic between the two is just hilarious, the way they play off each other is incredible. " -Jay Dolan '11

"One time on an away game to Loomis, Ryan Hartung '12 threw up at a restaurant. We felt really bad, and I won't go into detail, but we'll never forget it. Coach Mo was speechless, just looking down to shake his head in disapproval." -Tom Hamel '10

This season of Boys Varsity Swimming was probably the most special season that I have been a part of in my four years at Phillips Academy. Without a doubt, I would have to say that this was the hardest working team I have ever seen in my high school career. Every day we came to practice ready to work and ready to push each other to the next level. Whether we faced Super 100s, Team of One, Lactates, or just a good 2,000 yard set, the team took it all in stride and had a great time doing so. We knew what we wanted to accomplish, and we made these ambitions known to each other. At practices before each swim meet, we all gave our goals for the next day. I'm proud to say that we always gave everything we had to meet these goals and target times. This hard work paid off in a big way when Jun Oh '12 swam an amazing 500 freestyle, in which he broke the 25 year old school record by 7 seconds. This was only one of the many outstanding performances that this team had over the course of the season.

Through all of this hard work, the team still managed to have a little fun as well. Right from the start, the group bonded, which resulted in what I can only describe as a playful camaraderie that I will not forget. From hanging out on the bro row to calling for "Bobo," the team unity that I observed was extraordinary. This year's Boys Varsity Swim team was the most memorable for me because it brought together a group of hard-working entertaining guys whose dedication, commitment, and hilarity combined for one incredibly experience on Players Way.

Whether in the pool working hard on difficult sets, or on the pool deck cheering, dancing, or singing, we had a lot of fun together as a team this year. We pushed ourselves to a point of exhaustion and expended all of our energy. We experienced each other through the good times and the bad, and this caused us to become a family. Swimming is a rigorous sport and with the support and constant encouragement of teammates, we all improved. We cheered, clapped, and yelled for each other during our rough Lactate Sets on Wednesdays. We waved our hands and screamed on the edge of the pool during races to alert our swimmer of the fast approaching opponent in the other lane, and we gave one another pointers on how to improve turns, strokes, and starts. These are the moments never to be forgotten about the swim team, along with the compassion and the dedication. There was nothing more gratifying than watching teammates drop their times throughout the season and seeing their faces light up when they saw their time on the scoreboard: a new personal best. We were also a team that loved to have fun. Ten years from now the team will remember decorating shirts in the basement of Isham, singing in the showers after practice, dancing on the pool deck, sliding into the pool for our seal cheer, and meeting in the hall of our locker-room for pre-meet visualization sessions with Coach Murphy. The talent of the swimmers this year was incredible because, from the very first day of practice, everyone jumped into the pool and pushed themselves and their teammates to swim faster. Because of our ambitious beginning, we forced each other to become better swimmers. Even though we were all working towards individual goals, we all worked together as a team to win not just for ourselves, but for Andover. It will be extremely hard to graduate from Andover and leave the team behind, but all of the memories of teamwork, hard work, and good times in the pool and out, will stay with us forever.

2. Kristen Faulkner '11 takes a breath during sets in practice. Kristen is a distance swimmer, racing in the 500 and 200 meter freestyle events. She said of the team, "They make me laugh more than any other group of girls I've ever met."

3. Juliana Reider '10 stays focused while swimming the backstroke. She was sad that this was her last season swimming for Andover. She said, "If I could fit the whole swim team in my suitcase, I'd bring them all to college with me."

4. Lydia Azaret '12 swims the butterfly as a part of the Individual Medley. The butterfly is one of the most exhausting strokes, requiring a strong core and a perfected technique. She said, "Lane one for lyfe!"

5. Peyton Morss '10 participates in a relay event. In relays, team cohesiveness and spirit are crucial, which is why the Andover girls are so successful. Peyton said, "My time on the team has been full of hard work, laughter, and love. My four seasons have gone by in a blur of blue."
6. Maggie Shoemaker '12 swims her event, the 100 meter breaststroke, in the home pool. A new addition to the team this year, Maggie was amazed by all the team spirit. "Even though I didn't have the best season, I loved being on the team. By the end we are all so close and I will really miss our seniors next year," she said.

2. Colleen Flanagan '10 propels herself in the pole vault. She really enjoyed the tightness of the team. She said, "I really love the indoor team because it's always a lot smaller than the outdoor one so it's a more intimate team experience."
3. Chris Higgins '10 is in mid-air during the long jump. He loved jumping for the team. He said, "Everyone came to practice every day, so an undefeated season was only right."
4. Joseph Kruy '12 jumps the hurdles. He is a hurdler and a thrower on the team. He said, "I met some amazing people this season I wouldn't have met outside of the Cage."
5. Mick Wapinski '11 relaxes during a track meet. He said, "The track team was like a quesadilla: the coaches and captains were the tortillas holding it together. The sprinters and jumpers made up the cheesey center, and the distance runners were the guacamole. We grilled the quesadilla to perfection."

The Winter Track team partakes in the purest form of human competition. We compete with only the strength of our bodies, the focus of our minds, and the faith within our hearts. We find shelter from the harsh elements, but do not hibernate because of it. And by pushing ourselves within the concentrated intensity that is the Cage, we grow as individuals, and more importantly, as a team.

We all compete for a reason: to break stereotypes, for family, and or even for escape. Regardless of the reason, we all seek to overcome ourselves, because we pose as the greatest challenges to ourselves. It is up to the passion and perseverance of our spirit to break the times, distances, and heights that measure our feeble physical limitations.

6

We all train as team. Over the season, we build as one, cheer as one, and fight as one. We come together and form an extraordinary brotherhood that outrivals competition in strength, skill, and spirit. When the opponent is ahead, we chase them. When the opponent is beside, we beat them. When the opponent is behind, we crush them. We defend our Cage, undefeated, against the likes of Andover High, Haverhill, and above all - Exeter. As brothers, we enter the Cage expecting pain, accepting it, and subsequently, overcoming it.

Enter the Cage when a distance runner attacks 150m after the lactic acid has built up over each arduous lap, or when a jumper fearlessly hurls himself into the air or sand, or when a sprinter's body calls "Stop!" from pain as he forces past an opponent. Enter our Cage, and see how we define the words: Andover Track.

"The jacket throwing comes at the end of the first part of warm-up. Before that, though, an unsuspecting team member is called into the middle of the giant circle and has to lead jumping jacks. After they're done, the whole team closes the circle as they walk towards their captains, all while clapping faster and faster. When the time is right, the captain will either throw a tennis ball or a track jacket in the air. When it lands, the team will make a low yell. After this, the captains deliver their quick pre-practice talks."

We were at a low point this season when 5 out of the 7 players graduated last year. But the new players of the team have stepped it up to contribute to the team. The grueling matches and tough practices allowed us to gain experience and improved our game. Although we weren't the best in the league, the team bonding and dynamics will be unforgettable. We pushed each other to do our best. One of the most memorable moments was Nick Grace's '10 deciding match against St. Mark's. The team score was 3-3, and Nick was down 2-0 playing the deciding match for the win. Nick amazingly came back 2-2 and in the fifth game, and gave so much determination, diving across the corners of the court. Although he ultimately lost the game and the team lost 3-4 to St. Mark's, his effort was inspiring.

This year's team, although not as experienced as past teams, has been my favorite yet. At every practice and every game, everyone is ready to play hard and abide by our "Deserve to win" motto. We have had many tough matches this season which tested our will and sportsmanship. But I am proud of every player after they have stepped off the court, regardless of the outcome. They all played hard, ran to every ball, and deserved to win. For making this season so special, I thank my teammates and my coach.

Finishing with a 9-4 dual meet record, the Big Blue wrestling squad had a season full of ups and downs. The team hoped to pull out a close one against Loomis, but fell just short in the last bout. Andover's best match of the season was a romping of Exeter, dominating 42-25. When the team wasn't listening to "Shots," the Lil' Jon masterpiece, it was dominating the post season tournaments. Although the team finished fourth, Andover crowned four Class A champions: Colton Dempsey'12, Duncan Crystal '10, Ryan Gaiss '11, and Anthony Tedesco '12. This was the first time since 1970 that Andover had four champs in one year. The next weekend, the team finished with an astonishing third place finish at the Prep New England Championships. Brandon Sneider '12 wrestled an impressive tournament to capture a third place finish, as well as Will Park '11, who was giving ten to fifteen pounds up to the competition, but still managed to achieve a fourth place finish. Dempsey and Crystal both won championships in their weight classes. Andover had a total of seven members of the team qualify for Nationals, including Alex "The Executioner" Du '10, who qualified by placing eighth at New England's. Crystal and Gaiss both achieved All-American status by finishing in the top eight at Nationals. At Nationals, Crystal moved up to third on the all-time career wins list. Next year, the team will be led by captains Ryan Gaiss and Colton Dempsey, who look to continue the tournament success the team had this year.

"I met Duncan three years ago. At first, we started by continuously beating each other up in practice. Its funny to look back, but this was the beginning of our friendship. For three years, Duncan has been the person I looked up to the most in the wrestling room. He has taught me how to become a better wrestler, work hard, and lead a team. Thank you Duncan for guiding me all these years, and good luck at Johns Hopkins.
-Ryan Gaiss '11"

"Becoming an All-American has always been a goal of mine, so achieving that status my senior year was simultaneously joyous and relieving. It felt as though the all four years of work that I put into wrestling was lifted off my shoulders and transformed into something real. I am really going to miss Ryan Gaiss. He has been my drill partner for three years, and absolutely nothing has been more important to my success. I would not have achieved anything close to this season without him. I have relied on him, trusted Ryan, and enjoyed his company so much over the last three years that I can not yet imagine a winter without him.

Snow Competition

The Nordic Team this year was phenomenal. Both the boys and girls team skied hard every day (except for half of the season, when there was no snow). The boys team even reached 2nd place in a race and the girls team 3rd! The team's hard work speaks for itself in our race results, so as captains, we would like to acknowledge our teammates' well-earned triumphs off of the racecourse with some superlatives.

why nordic?

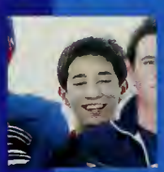

Going to my first race was a blast, but the sheer experience of being out on the snow and getting a great full body workout is what really draws me to the sport. It was a truly extraordinary experience and I hope to improve even more next season. -Aaron Finder '13

Specifically for Pierre-Julien Blouin
- Brenna Liponis '10

I started because I thought the idea of climbing up a hill on skis was interesting, even though I had no idea what the sport was like.
-Yuto Watanabe '11

The best part about Nordic has to be the time right after the race ends. This may sound kinda funny but you get a kind of high after the race is done and it feels really good.

We all arrived not knowing exactly what to expect. Nervous, excited, and ready to make friends, we embarked on a new adventure and turned the page to a next chapter in our lives. I went into Orientation with high hopes, ready to have fun making new friends and moving into a new school, free from my parents. It took only a few hours of pouring rain, pointless name games, and premature homesickness to sodden my spirits (and my clothes). These first few days were full of awkward introductions, struggles to remember names, and internal debates over whether or not it would be weird if I asked for his number. For many of us, freshman fall was filled with mortifying experiences. I walked headfirst into, and knocked over, a "Welcome Back" sign in Commons in front of a group of upperclassmen, accidentally cut the dinner lines about three times and got reprimanded by the hungry waiting kids, overslept several times, and had a mental breakdown in Isham. It took several nurses to get me to calm down and breath normally, while a senior walked by and gave me a look that said "Who is this freshman balling her eyes out and making noises like an asthmatic duck?"

Adjusting to a place like Andover is a tremendously hard thing to do. Although we will undoubtedly face challenges in the years to come, the challenges we face as freshmen are some of the most difficult of our time here. Everything is new and unfamiliar. Every day our eyes are opened to some new phenomenon that one can only find at Andover: the red lipstick of a Blue Key Head, the excitement of getting picked up for your first formal "date dance", the terror of Math 210, getting caught in the crazed mob on the hip-hop floor at Gelb, and the simple deliciousness of a Den cookie. We do not truly understand the ways of Andover yet, but we are learning quickly. We are making friends, getting attuned to campus life, finding our niches, and drawing the plans for our Andover careers.

The Class of 2013 does not yet share the same camaraderie that the other classes do, but this will change as our Andover experience continues. We will face challenges as a class that will bring us closer together. In this year of unprecedented growth and change, we are already acquiring class spirit, pride, and unity, which will one day match that of the seniors. I have no doubt that when it is our turn, we will shake the walls of the chapel just as loudly, if not louder, than the seniors we watched this past fall.

People tend to look down upon freshmen, but really, we are the lucky ones. We have the most to learn, and Andover has the most to give to us.

'13 freshmen

My favorite thing about the class of 13 is our unique sense of unity. Though it may be the same with all freshman classes, the class of thirteen always seems to travel in packs. Whether its to classes, sports events, or simply sitting at lunch, you will rarely see a freshman on their own. We monopolize the sidewalks when en route and cram dozens of people into the smallest table in commons. Like no other, we stick together and treat each other like family (only more awesome). - Scott Livingston '13

My favorite thing about the class of 2013 is that we are still young. we have a lot of time in front of us to try new things and improve. We are the future of P.A. and we can improve thigs, such as the athletic teams and the academics, during the time we have left here.

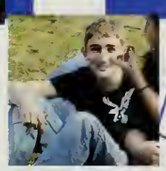

- An Huyhn '13

"My favorite thing about the Class of '13 is that everyone is open-minded to try new things. I was told to try as many new things as possible. Not quite sure what choose, I decided on the community service, ARC. It was one of the most rewarding programs I have ever participated in. The many opportunities Andover provides is astounding. I know I will continue with ARC and other community services during my time here at Andover."

Free from pass-or-fail classes and eleven o' clock lights out, the Class of '12 began the year welcoming 60 new members to our class. Fall term challenged us to use our experiences from Junior year to adjust to new upperclassmen dorms, classes, and expectations. As the leaves quickly traded their green for orange, we donned our blue gear heading to Exeter for our first away Andover/Exeter football game. As expected, Exeter was dreary, rainy, and depressing, making us all the more proud to go to Andover.

Soon, before we knew it, assessment week was over and we could let out a silent sigh of relief: we had survived Fall term.

Suddenly, like the several frequent snowstorms, Winter term was upon us. It descended slowly, as we got over vacation-induced stupors, and confronted problem sets, quizzes, and tests. Mrs. Chase taunted us through Facebook and haikus, as we eagerly awaited our second Head of School Day.

Then in the middle of Winter Term, we began to question our class identity: how did we want to be remembered at this school? During our Junior year, we discovered our reputation as the school slobs after leaving trays of food on tables at Uncommons. In our Lower year, we set out to define ourselves. We were familiar with the traditions, but needed to find our place, our identity in the school. We passed around microphones at class meetings and brainstormed slogans, but no goal or message fit. The Class of '12 could not be defined, not because of our problems, but because of our individuality. We are a class of record-breakers, trendsetters, and inventors. While we could not find a singular definition for ourselves, musically inclined members of our class started bands, skilled athletes in our class dominated varsity sports, and academically talented students from our class qualified for national contests. We are a class of individuals, creative and distinct, and that ultimately defines us.

Rumors be gone: Lower year was no cakewalk. True, we had fun, gaining access to privileges like parietals and personal time. We leapt forward, jumping off balconies in PE class. We grew closer, discussing and learning in PACE. We became knights, fighting for justice under our very own class rep, Henry Zhu. But most of all, end of the world or not, the Class of 2012 showed we know how to have fun, study hard, and make you want to be One Two.

Upper year: two words sure to strike fear into the heart of any underclassman. We've all heard the stories of caffeine-filled cram sessions at three o'clock in the morning, the anecdotes about nervous breakdowns, and the terrifying tales of despair and dreariness that were synonymous with Upper Winter. That being said, we were determined to prove that this year, things would be different. This year, we would be the first to conquer the infamous challenge. On Tuesday September 15th, 2009, the members of the Class of 2011 arrived rejuvenated from summer vacation and ready to attack Upper year.

The two hundred and sixty two days since have brought us together in ways we could have never imagined. I needed only to look around the dinner table and see the bags under my fellow classmates' eyes to know that we were all going through the same thing. We supported each other after bad grades and celebrated after good ones. We screamed ourselves hoarse in the stands, and ran until we dropped on the sports field. We changed the paradigm of Upper year, and proved that even though it is difficult, it can be surmounted with aplomb. We marched to the beat of a different drummer: the rhythm of Casey McQuillen's guitar, the cadence of Patrick Brady's voice, the slamming of Aniebiet Ekpa's hands, and the pounding of Chris Batchelder's feet. We made it through Upper year, and on Thursday June 3rd, we bid goodbye to it forever.

There have been moments during this journey that have given me pause, moments that have made me stop and think why I was working so hard for so long. It was during one of these periods of reflection that I realized what Upper year was truly about. It's more than just late-nights and Red Bull, it's about preparing ourselves for the rest of our lives, about building a foundation. We took the blueprint that we had been subconsciously drawing throughout our early years and finally started to build something concrete. We delved into deeper concepts, dreamt up solutions to the world's biggest problems, and overcame tremendous adversity. This base that we built will last for the rest of our lives, and all of our future exploits will be based on the work that we did this year. May we approach our time as Seniors with the same fire, the same desire, the same attitude, as we did Upper year, and let us finish our time here at PA with the goal of building on our foundation, and preparing for the rest of our lives.

From freshman year to goodbye tears, it appears that while we were here, we conquered fears. We've been two thousand and ten since way back when we first arrived promising to strive to touch the sky. Goodbye couldn't be harder, but I guess I love you, Andover, works for starters.

From Paul Revere to Thompson House, we've made best friends we can't live without. From Taylor to Stearns, it seems we've learned, that when it comes to stout trust, there is no reason for us to doubt. What I'm talking about is the times we've spent that seem to blend, as well as every cent spent in The Den. Since way back when we first arrived at the Video Dance, and girls tried to survive every guys' fast advance, through every Last Chance under the tent next to Gelb, to the cheers and jeers at each A/E that we yelled.

I'm compelled to bring up our athletic success. From hockey to swimming and all of the rest, whether winning or spinning, we've each tried our best and whether cluster or varsity, we shot balls into nets. Whether it's Andrew Khang in the gym doing sets, or Alex Farrell on the field, (that's a woman possessed), we'll go out with a bang in each athletic contest.

Yet I must attest to all we've been through, getting no rest, filling up the sleep room, in every English class all the books we read through, to Uncommons and back, and still we eat through, from pre-pubescent teens to legal adults; and still we bleed blue.

Look around you and try to say that this place isn't beautiful. The angels in the Chapel, the Globe and the Phallic Statue, tour groups looking at you, snow lining the path as studious underclassmen run past you, and the Great Lawn when the sun shines at you and you know you won't make it to 6th period Spanish... and 7th period Math too. Because at its worst, Andover is still the best place on earth.

We've been screamed at during Orientation, and screamed ourselves feeling more elation than when we found ourselves stationed at dorms like Nathan Hale. We've acquired knowledge and applied to college. We've sat in GW. We've sat in The Den. Some of us became women and some of us men.

We've marched into All-School and attended prom, we've spent hours on the lawn, and even though those days are gone, we will always live on, for the Blue seeps into your skin, and we'll forever keep each other within, as our Blueprints begin to sink in.

Is there no summons when, at morning's call,

The sable vestments of the darkness fall?

Does not meek evening's low-voiced Ave blend

With the soft vesper as its notes ascend?

Is there no whisper in the perfumed air

When the sweet bosom of the rose is bare?

Does not the sunshine call us to rejoice?

Is there no meaning in the storm-cloud's voice?

No silent message when from midnight skies

Heaven looks upon us with its myriad eyes?

Or shift the mirror; say our dreams diffuse

O'er life's pale landscape their celestial hues,

Lend heaven the rainbow it has never known,

And robe the earth in glories not its own,

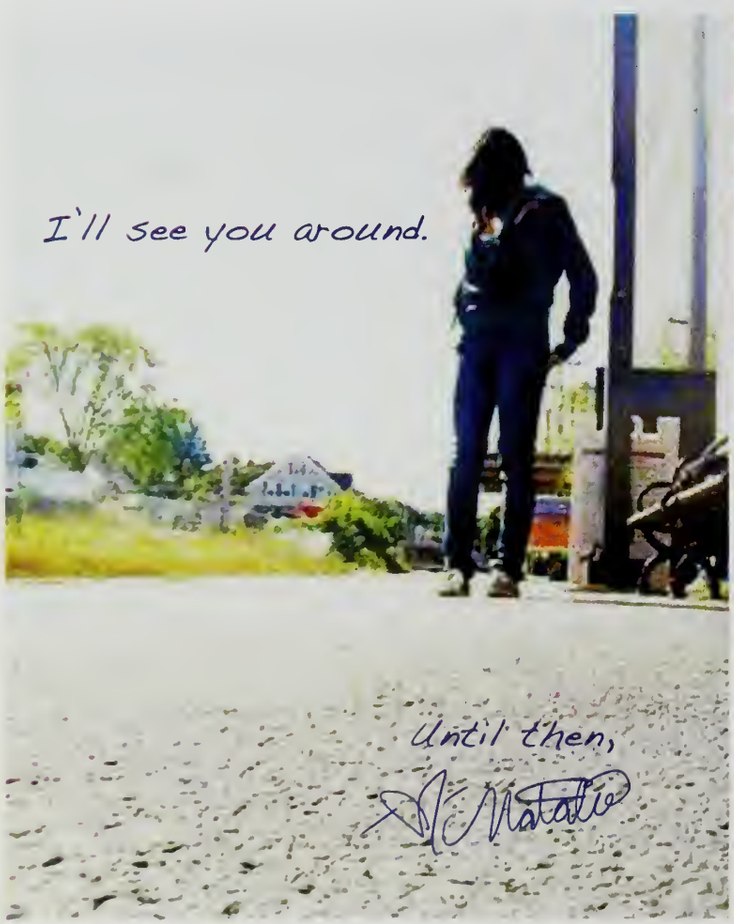

Sing their own music in the summer breeze,

With fresher foliage clothe the stately trees,

Stain the June blossoms with a livelier dye

And spread a bluer azure on the sky, -

If some tired wanderer, resting from his flight,

Amid the gay young choristers alight,

These gather round him, mark his faded plumes

That faintly still the far-off grove perfumes,

And listen, wondering if some feeble note

Yet lingers, quavering in his weary throat: -

I, whose fresh voice yon red-faced temple knew,

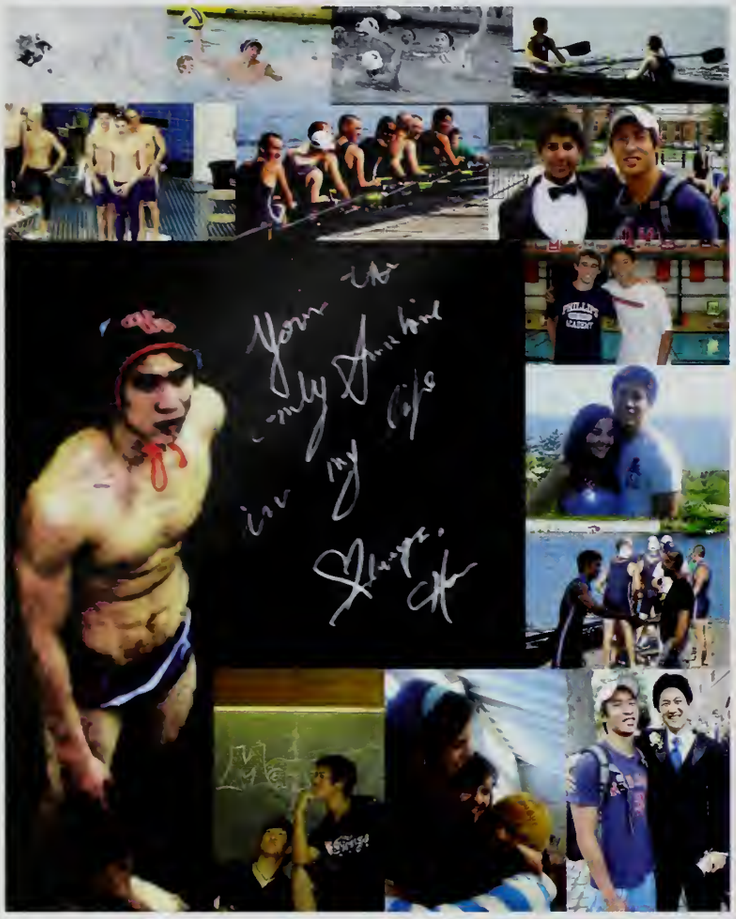

What tune is left me, fit to sing to you?

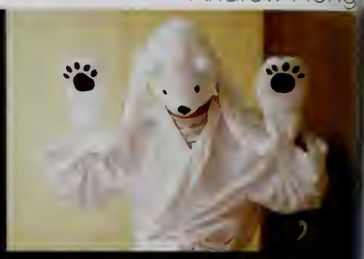

Even he, to whom most things that most people would think were pretty smart were pretty dumb, thought it was pretty smart.

My cheek was bare of adolescent down

When first I sought the academic town;

Slow rolls the coach along the dusty road,

Big with its filial and parental load;

The frequent hills, the lonely woods are past,

The school-boy's chosen home is reached at last.

The swinging gate, the little garden plot,
The narrow yard, the rock that made its floor,
The flat, pale house, the knocker-garnished door,
The small, trim parlor, neat, decorous, chill,
The strange, new faces, kind, but grave and still;
Two, creased with age,-or what I then called age,- Life's volume open at its fiftieth page;
One, a shy maiden's, pallid, placid, sweet
As the first snow-drop, which the sunbeams greet;
One, the last nursling's; slight she was, and fair,
Her smooth white forehead warmed with auburn hair;
Last came the virgin Hymen long had spared,
Whose daily cares the grateful household shared,
Strong, patient, humble; her substantial frame
Stretched the chaste draperies I forbear to name.

Brave, but with effort, had the school-boy come

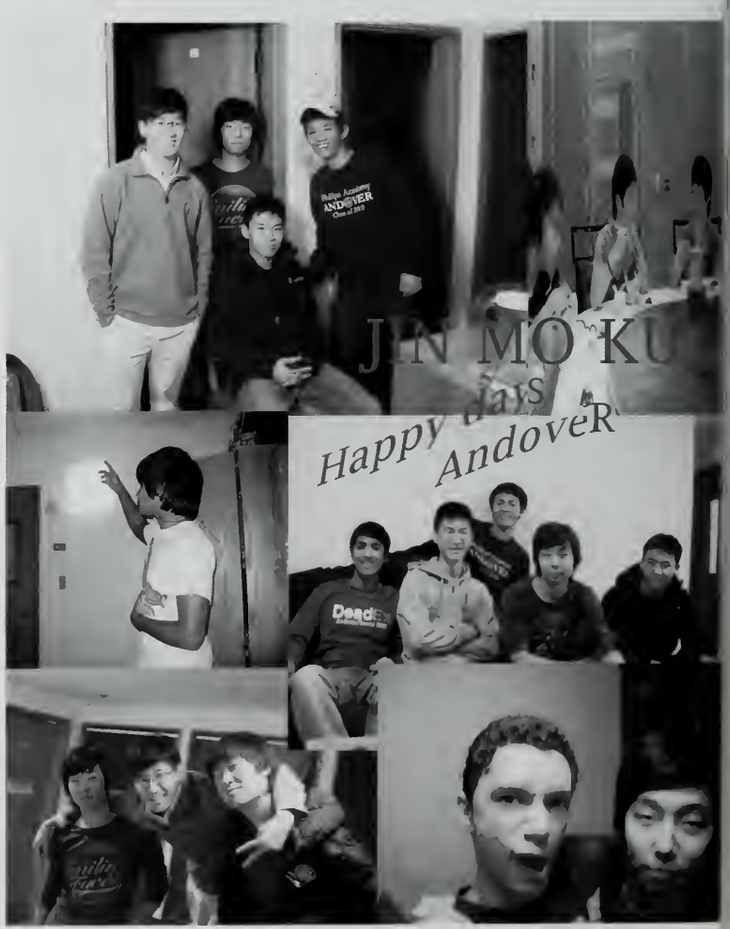

To the cold comfort of a stranger's home;

How like a dagger to my sinking heart

Came the dry summons, "It is time to part;

Good-by!" "Goo-ood-by!" one fond maternal kiss. . .

Homesick as death! Was ever pang like this?

Hey there Ladies. Hey there Fellas.
This is because we've been to hell and back.
This is because we were a pack.

Just because we don't talk anymore –
Doesn't mean I don't adore –
The things you did for me.
You made me, Friend. You made me free.

Moments so fleeting – we can't stop time.
You've left me atop a cloud, feeling sublime.
Dazzled by the light –
Naught but ecstasy in the night.

Yet, there were those days...
When all was ablaze.
The saltwater tears rained down my cheeks.
My hair was wet with rain and streaks.

Time's been lost. Chances have been had.
Why, oh why, were we so damn bad?
But, there's a little left to salvage.
Are you up to the challenge?

Join me, Friend – COME be with me.
Let's take a stroll in the rain – COME and see.
There are more chances to be had.
So, COME – and don't be sad.

COME to the fête of fêtes – to the class of 2010.
Before we discover we're already women and men.
COME to the party of life – COME light up a face.
A word. A smile. A kiss. An embrace.

Oh, Andover – how I dote on you.
You've made me happy. You've made me blue.
The truest siren – the truest friend.
I know you'll be with me until the end.

If you can keep your head when all about you
Are losing theirs and blaming it on you;
If you can trust yourself when all men doubt you,
But make allowance for their doubting too;
If you can dream - and not make dreams your master;
If you can think - and not make thoughts your aim;
If you can meet with triumph and disaster
And treat those two imposters just the same;
If you can talk with crowds and keep your virtue,
Or walk with kings - nor lose the common touch;
If neither foes nor loving friends can hurt you,

Think about what you do, and more specifically, why you do it. Critically consider your beliefs, ask yourself uncomfortable questions.

Think.

I trust that we will no doubt change the world. I do not trust that that change will be good. Figure out what good is, and then be consistant with that as you make the change you undoubtedly will.

ground breaking

andover's record breakers

Garnet Hathaway '10 broke the record for most goals scored by a player in his Andover career. The previous record had been 40 goals. This past fall, Garnet scored his 41st career goal in a game against Tilton. He has played on Varsity Soccer for four years, and is now the top scorer, to be remembered in the record books.

"It was an awesome accomplishment for me to beat the record for most goals this year. The thought of graduating from Andover this year isn't great, but, I will never forget my team and the amazing season we had."
-Garnet Hathaway '10

Garnet Hathaway '10
Jun Oh '12

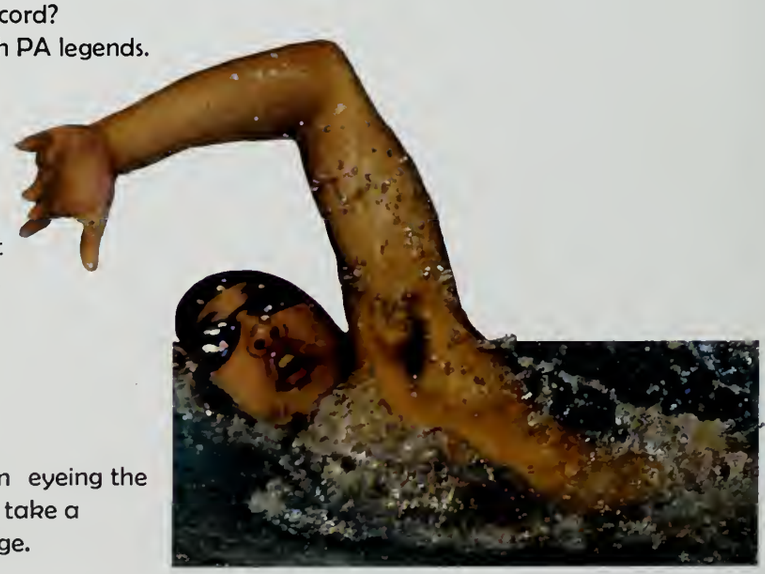

In a home meet against Northfield Mount Hermon, Jun Oh '12 swam a 4:34.90 in the 500-yard freestyle race. He swam more than seven seconds faster than a long-standing schooland pool record set in 1985.

Q: How does it feel to break a twenty-five year record?
A: I am honored to be up on the record board with PA legends.

Q: Did you go into the race wanting to break the record or did it just happen?
A: I actually did want to break a record, but I was only going for the school record. When I found out I got the pool record as well, it was pretty exciting.

Q: Did you do anything crazy to celebrate?
A: I ate a ton of food. Ice cream is always nice...

Q: What are your swimming goals for the future?
A: Perhaps break a couple more records. I'm eyeing the 200IM and the 200FR record. I know it's going to take a lot of work to get there, but I'm up for the challenge.

In a home meet against Northfield Mount Hermon, Kendall MacRae '11 broke a 25-year-old diving record by scoring 267 points. She nailed each of her six dives that day.

"Everything really came down to my last dive. Diving is all about consistency. During the meet, I just tried to pretend like I was diving during practice. I think the key was that I did not mess up any dive and really nailed my easier dives. I actually ended up competing two of my easier dives that I enjoy and can consistently do well. After I finished the meet I had a good feeling that I had broken the record, but I wasn't one hundred percent sure. My sisters and a few of my friends were in the stands and had been adding up my score during the meet. After I finished my last dive I looked up into the stands and after seeing their thumbs up I knew I had broken the record. I was so happy!" -Kendall Macrae '11

Kendall MacRae '11
Colleen Flanagan '10

Colleen Flanagan '10 cleared 8'7" in the pole vault, breaking a record set in 1997 by half a inch.

"For many reasons, vaulting indoors is harder than doing so outdoors, so not breaking this record for a long time was frustrating because I had been vaulting higher than it outdoors for a long time. Finally clearing the bar was a moment of pure relief. I have had my eye on that record board for a long time now, and I always knew I could do it, but something always seemed to stand in the way (injury, lack of sleep, etc.). That day, I knew my name was going up on that board, finally, and I knew who I had to thank-- my fellow pole vaulters. Mr. Avery came up to be a little while later and told me that I had just broken his daughter's record." -Colleen Flanagan '10

charlie and mia pecora

"For our first month of school together, Charlie refused to talk to me or acknowledge my existence. But when he got over that, we started going to breakfast together on weekends, and its awesome to have a brother here when the rest of my family is 3,000 miles away." -Mia

"We entered Andover the same year, Mia as a new upper and I as a freshman. It was definitely nice to know that I had somebody to go to if I had a problem. I don't see my sister too often, but I don't particularly like when she makes me go to breakfast on weekends with her. Just kidding." -Charlie

emily & erin johnson

"I like having Erin here because I can always have an eye on her. We do very different activities, but it is nice to know that I can help her out if she needs anything. I try to give as much advice as possible. And plus, she instantly has senior friends. She's so cool. I am definitely glad Erin decided Andover was the place for her. Of course, she has a tough act to follow, but I think she will do just fine." -Emily

"A lot of people know me as 'Emily's little sister,' and that's a name I'll always be proud to have. I hope that over my time here I will succeed the way that she has. The successes may be different, but so are we, and I can't imagine it any other way." -Erin

sarah and ricky marcotte

Favorite thing about Sarah: She works so hard. She's more suited for Andover than I am in that sense. I wish I had her drive.

Others may not know: She's a great singer. She doesn't like to perform much but it's a different story at home.

Can't agree on: Freshmen boys.

-Ricky

Favorite thing about Sarah: He has good taste in music.

Others may not know: He's actually just a big teddy bear once you get to know him.

Can't agree on: Baseball is the most boring sport ever created.

lauren & steph kim

"A lot of people would come up to me and say we look 'exactly the same,' and 'just like twins.' I would have at least five people a day tell me that during fall term. That number has died down quite a bit since then, thankfully. We do dress similarly, but that's because we always go shopping together. Other than that, our personalities are completely different." -Lauren

"On Valentines Day, I was in Commons, and Michael Scognamiglio'10 came up to me and said, 'Lauren, Happy Valentine's Day!' He kissed me on the cheek and walked away before I could say anything." -Steph

emily and susanna rademacher

"Susanna and I are pretty close in age, even though we're two grades apart. When she was little, I was still learning how to talk and had a really hard time saying her name, and all I could say was Susu. It's been her nickname since. Also, this is a sore subject, but...Susanna's taller than me. I'm still waiting for that growth spurt..." -Emily

"I love having Emily here because it has brought us closer together. Before, I only got to see her on holidays and over the summer, and now I get to see her all the time." -Susanna Thoughts: Having a sibling here does makes things easier. Our mom doesn't call me as often now.

"During the first month of school I was routinely shouted at, hugged, and (almost) slapped on the butt by confused freshman thinking they were actually greeting my sister. Whenever a gawky freshman boy ran up to me I would preemptively say, 'I'm her sister' to prevent any embarrassment on both sides." -Sarah

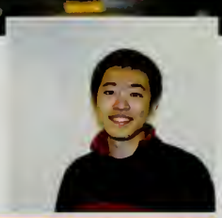

"I love having Sarah at school with me. She has been a great help, Something people wouldn't know about her? She likes to jam out to British rap when she thinks no one is watching." -Emily

Joanna Wang '11

"There's nothing more satisfying than working in Steinbach, twenty feet off the ground with nothing but a wire net to support your weight, a wrench in your back pocket, and being surrounded by lights that need fixing. Being a techie sort of sneaks up on you and takes over your life, so you find yourself spending hours in dusty places trying to make everything work come performance time. It's quite humbling, to stand before the stage and watch a performance you helped create-- it takes your breathe away because no matter how many tears have been spent bemoaning the long hours, neglected schoolwork and plummeting grades, the show is something you've put your heart and soul into."

Kevin Song '11

"I would say the funniest things about each show are the inside jokes and traditions that develop over the headsets. For instance, we now say "BREAK A FLOPPY DISK!" instead of "Break a Leg" because I lost all the light cues for Grasshopper night due to a bad floppy disk. The most frustrating and nerve-wracking are the last minute things that go wrong, either just before, or during a show. Regardless, each of us have left our distinct marks in the light booths of Tang and Steinbach."

behind the scenes

"I have a love-hate relationship with backstage tech, and I'm sure other techies can sympathize with me on this one. It's pretty stressful when you are about to run the show, thinking about the million things that could go wrong -- a prop left on stage, skipping a light cue, missing actors. The only thing that keeps me from going crazy is the awesome team of techies I'm working with on every production, who always have my back. What makes it all worth it? The applause at the end of the show, for one, and also making sketchy comments about the audience on our headsets."

Annie Li '10

Katy Svec '10

"People often ask me why I prefer to work behind the curtain. I'm not by any means a shy person. It's not that I have stage fright. I enjoy the self-satisfaction that comes from working hard and seeing tangible proof of all that effort. The knowledge that I attached that wallpaper, or painted that window box, may seem like a small thing, but for me it's huge. When I look at that window box, I don't see a simple blue box. I see myself stirring goopy paint in the scene shop for thirty minutes to find the right color. I see myself painstakingly painting the edge, so as not to drip on the wall. I see myself frantically running to find a wet rag, when I inevitably spill."

"Jenn Gerald '10, Chelsea Quezergue '10 and I were on Chat Roulette, trying to find cool people. We then see this awesome looking guy with dreads and horn rimmed glasses and Chelsea just starts singing in Spanish to him. He then asks her to email him because she has a beautiful voice. Turns out this guy is the creator of one of my absolute favorite website and blogs! We are friends on Facebook. But Chelsea never emailed him." -Sam Oriach '11

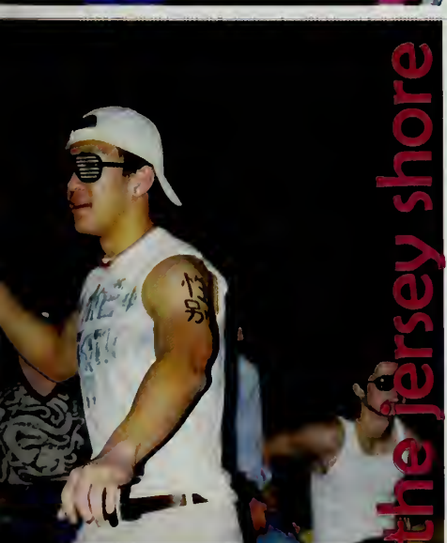

Chat Roulette

"One night on Chat Roulette, I found this dude with a red hoodie on. He was going to 'next' me, and I frantically type WAIT! I went and put on my hoodie, which was blue, but looked similar to his red one. I proceeded to mimic him exactly, hood up and staring blankly without saying anything. Then the dude told me to wait. He goes back to his closet and brings out a blue hoodie. Turns out the hoodie was the exact same hoodie I was wearing, and we were simultaneously wearing the same hoodies with the same expressions on our faces. We then "brofisted" via webcam and parted ways." -Matt Renner '10

a day in the life

Rochelle Wilbun '13

6:00 am: My alarm clock goes off...I go back to sleep.

6:45 am: My eyes pop open. I run to the shower to beat out the nine other girls in my hall.

8:10 am: I arrive 10 minutes late to my art class. My teacher arrives 7 minutes later.

9:45 am: I go to Commons to get a vanilla coffee and my daily raisin bagel, drenched in butter. My friends and I eat in Lower Left. They make fun of my over-buttered bagel.

11:10 am: I get to Spanish class early. As soon as Senora Allen starts speaking in Spanish, I'm lost.

1:05 pm: While eating lunch with my friends, we admiringly stare and point at gorgeous upperclassMEN. We then get strawberry fro-yo to comfort ourselves for being freshmen.

3:13 pm: I walk into the ballet studio for my Ballet 1 class, a little late. Ms. Wombwell doesn't appear too happy. I take a place at the barre and begin plies.

5:03 pm: I meet my friends at dinner and despair over the lousy options in Commons for that evening.

5:51 pm: I call my friend from home while walking back to the dorm alone. I complain about the weather, the food, and the boys here. She tells me it's sunny and 65 degrees at home.

8:15 pm: After signing out of my dorm, I go to Elson to work on my current art project. I sit for an hour pretending I am Picasso.

10:56 pm: I run into the restroom to wash my face and brush my teeth before lights-out along with 5 other girls on my hall.

11:00 pm: My prefect yells lights-out down the hall. I turn out my lights and scramble around my room in the dark doing this and that before hopping into my bed.

Teddy Smyth '11

8:17 am: Awaken to the blaring alarm clock of someone in my hall.

8:19 am: Take shower and match clothes carefully.

8:37 am: Stare at reflection in mirror for 5 minutes. [177 steps to Commons]

8:42 am: Breakfast in Upper Left. [86 steps to Gelb]

8:53 am: Walk 47 steps up Gelb staircase. I almost pass out. [198 steps to library]

9:54 am: Pretentiously read the newspaper. [343 steps around campus + 12 steps avoiding puddles]

1:32 pm: Complain about the weather weather. [181 steps to Stuart]

2:55 – 3:42 pm: Naptime!

4:00 pm: Jump up and down for an hour...aka Varsity Diving. [164 steps to Commons]

5:45 pm: Dinner in Upper Right.

9:47 pm: Lights in my room flash for no apparent reason... my room is definitely haunted.

10:32 pm: Talk to Mr. Tanner, my house counselor, for an hour.

11:32 pm: Run around the dorm, looking for excitement.

12:00 am: Found the excitement. Summon Bloody Mary in the bathroom mirror with the Stuart boys.

12:12 am: Microwave milk for 1:47 minutes to make hot chocolate.

12:13 am: It doesn't work... Stuart fire alarm goes off. People aren't too happy.

1:23 am: Homework...?

2:43 am: Collapse.

Andrew Cho '12

7:45 am: Roll out of bed, leave Fuess after a quick shower.
8:01 am: Pop quiz in my Chinese class (what a great way to start the day...ugh), Sam Phil.
8:40 am: Run to Commons to grab a muffin and chug down a cup of Oran-Cran juice.
8:50 am: Physics with Dr. "Watt," Gelb.
Conference-- Breakfast time!
10:21 am: Etym-o-log-y with Pro-fess-or Kip and a bunch of sen-iors, Pearson.
11:16 am: Rush to Commons to have steak stir-fry, by far my favorite Commons food, Commons.
12:12 pm: An intense history session with Mr. Hession, Sam Phil.
1:08 pm: Poetry studies with Mr. Tortorella, Bulfinch.
2:00 pm: Phillipian interview for my article this week (News Section Pride!)
3:15 pm: Squash (not the vegetable), Borden Gym.
5:00 pm: Dinner with the Poon Squad.
6:30 pm: Asian Society Meeting. We have Asian people and Asian snacks. What more could you ask for?, CAMD.
7:00 pm: Heart to heart/Ping pong session with my dorm buddies, Fuess.

Liz Lavin '10

7:00 am: Wake up, wash face, brush teeth, and head off to classes
8:55 am: Attempt to keep up with native speakers in Chinese 620 with Yan Laoshi
10:20 am: Go to Math with Mr. Alonso and prove to Jacob Shack '10 that I am better at math.
11:15 am: Show my artsy side in Photography with Mr. Wicks .
12:10 pm: Eat lunch with my friends, and am probably eating chicken nuggets.
1:05 pm: Laugh at Juliet Liu '10 throughout my whole Economics class with Dr.Shaw .
2:00 pm: Attempt to understand Aristotle and Kierkegaard in Being, Thinking, Doing with Mr.Fox.
3:00 pm: Get burnt on the great lawn.
3:15 pm: Go to a sport that involves little to no physical activity. Cluster Ultimate Champions, team number four!!!!!
4:00 pm: Cram in some work before dinner .
5:45 pm: Cram in some work before ARC .
6:20 pm: Go to ARC. Shoot some hoops and chat up the ladies with Johnny my ARC buddy .
8:00 pm: On-duty in the dorm. Search for some uppers who have fallen asleep while doing work, and forgot to sign in.
10:00 pm: Host Paul Revere third north weekly SSHP (super secret hall party. Sounds stupid, but it is pretty awesome) .
12:00 am: Get ready for bed and dance to my shower radio with the Paul Revere third north lowers (Greer McBeth, Sage Hunt, and Borkeny Sambou) .
12:30 am: Finish up my work and go to bed.

non sibi in action

andover's response to natural disasters

Non Sibi. It's not only something we preach, but something we take into action, especially when the times called for it. This year, devastating natural disasters such as the earthquake in Haiti propelled many of us into action.

Commons tables were pushed together and initiatives started. Selfless students came up with ideas on how they could send help from Andover to Haiti. Andover Philanthropists' Society, PANDA, MMPC, and Alianza Latina were a few clubs who motivated our campus to donate money.

the dodgeball tournament

The West Quad North fashion show, directed by Edith Young '10 and backed by cluster dean Chad Green, raised $1400 for the Partners In Health STAND FOR HAITI initiative. This was the most money the fashion show has ever raised under Chad Green's governance. With over fifteen designers and thirty models, the fashion show gave girls and boys a chance to strut the catwalk in Kemper, all for a good cause.

Student Activities Board hosted a Dodgeball tournament. By charging students $2 at the door and teams $10 to participate, SAB raised over $800 for relief efforts in Haiti. Fans cheered enthusiastically for their favorite teams, and the teams battled competitively in the Cage. The Day Student Express won, and PG chillin' came in a close second.

The annual Alternative Spring Break trip to John's Island, South Carolina gave 40 students and seven faculty members to work with a group called Rural Missions. The group worked on four different homes, repairing roofs, floors and walls. John's Island is often struck my hurricanes, and members of the community work hard to keep their lives and community on the island intact despite harsh weather and poverty. By repairing the homes, the Andover community was able to help the John's Island community to maintain life and culture in this difficult situation.

andover initiatives

As soon as we heard about the travesty in Haiti, the club met to think about how we could help. Along with Andover Philanthropists' Society and Alianza Latina, we came up with a feasible plan to sell Blue and Silver bouquets. Hearts for Haiti, as our project was called, was focused, not so much on raising money for the victims, but more so on showing our PA community that events like Blue and Silver can be both fun and charitable. Considering the project had been done on such short notice and was really one of the first of its kind, we did a great job! We even ended up running out of roses! The project got students talking and this kept the victims of Haiti in their minds, which I think was really our biggest success. As PANDA continues to grow as a club and influence on campus, I would hope to continue keep this as our theme.

–Angelica Jarvenpaa '11

"I never knew how devastating an earthquake could be until I traveled to China last summer and went some of the areas that were hit by the Sichuan earthquake in 2008. This year, Haiti was equally unlucky to have been struck by such a destructive natural disaster, and after what I had seen in China, I knew that the situation could not have been any better. Organizing the donation box was an easy and simple way to raise money for Haiti, but at the same time it wouldn't have been possible without the students who eagerly volunteered their time to help out. The money we raised will be pooled together with donations coming from other fundraisers on campus and sent to various NGOs and organizations working now to get the people in Haiti back on their feet."

-Annie Li '10

Kristin Mendez

"I'm not really sure how to describe my style because it's constantly changing. I always have to be comfortable, though, so I usually start out with simple things and layer on. I like playing around with combinations of clothes, so I can wear my favorite things with different accessories, and they look unique each time."

Kerry Joyce

"I like to dress like an English dandy. I especially love the clothes of Oscar Wilde and Bosie Douglas. In the winter, my favorite article of clothing is my black tailcoat. Of course I have a great number of bowties and a few ties, which I wear nearly every day. In the spring, I love to wear my 1920's straw boater, at a jaunty angle, naturally."

Khalid McCaskill

"Every day when I get dressed, I try to bring some swagger from Harlem, where I'm from. I love all different flavors or colors. Whether it's something from Aero, Polo, American Eagle, H&M or Uniqlo, it has to be flashy. I take pride in the way I dress. I wish everyone else would too..."

Georgia Pelletie

"Old school preppy meet polished and urbane. I'm inspired by vintage menswear and modern lines. I like neutral tones dark greens, and my prized custom leather riding boots. I dress for comfort, for ease, for simplicity - and always with a touch of class."

Daniel Santamaria

Known to wear a t-shirt that has a picture of the icon "McLovin" from Superbad, Daniel and his wardrobe are infused with this kind of humor, but he balances his silliness by wearing a suit and tie usually once a week. He said, "My favorite articles of clothing are my leather jacket and my brimmed-hat. I'm not really inspired in the morning. I just try to look nice."

Mimi Leggett

"I like to dress up a lot just for regular school days because it gives an edge to my day when I know I have something nice on. I like wearing skirts and dresses because usually people don't wear them often. It's nice to have some variation in your look. Andover has a very defined style, which I love. You need to dress for function, but you want to look good."

Will Lindsey

"Be it the purple sweater, UNC jacket, or camo hoodie, I always try to maintain a level of class in my wardrobe. I also like embroidered pants and Bean boots. I don't always match, but the combinations make the man."

Shannon McSweeney

"I usually throw on a white V-neck, sweats, my winter Bean boots with the tongue hanging down, and my hair up in a bun. Most of my teachers tell me that they don't recognize me if my hair is not on the top of my head. Sometimes I like to throw in a splash of color here or there. Whether it's in my purple wind breaker sweats or a field hockey head band, I like to get it in there somehow."

trendsetters

musicfest

"The reaction Aazim Jafarey '11 and I got with 'PA State of Mind' was awesome. Everyone seemed really into the song, and we had a blast performing, with everyone singing along during the chorus. At an event that showcased so much of Andover's talent, the crowd responded really well to Aazim's lyrics about how awesome Andover is. There are a variety of shows for Andover musicians to perform in. Most of the time it's low key, but then there are big shows like Music Fest that allow us to ramp it up."
-Casey McQuillen '11

"Music Fest was our debut performance. The show went well, and we were all happy about it afterward. And we also totally rocked on stage with our sunglasses. Peter Yang '10 and David Lim '12 share the transcribing and arranging jobs. 'This Love' is my favorite song right now, and we performed it at Music Fest. We're working on a lot of arrangements, so look out for us in the future."
-Sky Yoo '11

I had so much fun playing on stage that night. The crowd made it as enjoyable as it could have been. Watching the crowd rise to their feet during 'Tribute' by Tenacious D was awesome. Seeing the crowd clap their hands in unison to the beat of 'You Look Good in My Shirt' by Keith Urban was a great sight to see from the stage. And seeing and hearing the crowd going kind of nuts when I played with my teeth was awesome. Also at the end when there were chants of 'Bass Pro Shops!' that just made my day, and I still laugh when I watch videos of it. It was undoubtedly my best night at this school."
–Sam August '10

"I chose to sing the song 'It Ain't Me Babe' by one of my favorite artists: Bob Dylan. I learned to play the song only a couple of days before the performance and had a hard time memorizing the lyrics.I didn't realize how big the crowd was until it was my turn to go on stage. The only thing that kept me from being nervous was that I knew, that even if I did a terrible job, my friends would still cheer for me. Overall, my performance went really well. I did sing some randomly made up lyrics in the second chorus, but I don't think anyone even noticed!" -Emilie Kannekens '10

After 44 years of teaching at Andover, Mr. Penner puts away his chalk and red pens and says goodbye to the Andover community. Throughout his time here, he has written a textbook and adapted his teaching styles to the flux of new technology that was introduced. Teaching in the classroom is a true joy for him. For Penner, there are too many outstandig moments at Andover.

Mr. Penner

"I am truly going to miss the day-to-day contact with the students and my colleagues. I won't be living too far, so I may just show up on campus one day! Phillips Academy has just been a great place to work."
-Mr. Penner

"My favorite thing about math is Mr. Penner's birthday song. Before I ever heard the song, I said happy birthday to a girl in my class. Right away Mr. Penner turned around and burst into song. He sings very well and very loudly! It was so funny. I am going to miss Mr. Penner!" -Kelsey Jamieson '12

Mr. Stableford

"In many ways it has been strange teaching as I have for over thirty years at a school I once attended. There are days when I see clear parallels between my students and the experience I had here in a single-sex school many years ago, but more often there is no resemblance at all. The school had already changed remarkably when I returned to teach in 1976, and what has continued to excite me through the years is the continuing development and growth of the school. As a classroom teacher and a sometimes administrator, I have enjoyed being a part of this dynamic process." - Mr. Stableford

Mr. Stableford also bids goodbye to a twenty-year coaching career at Andover. As a Boys Cross Country coach, his teams have won five Interscholastic Championships. After his last home win, over forty cross country alumni returned to Andover to honor Stableford. Stableford said, "What I found in running and in coaching runners was something very special, almos spiritual; and the satisfaction it afforded me has made me very happy."

Dr. Avery

"What I will miss most is conversation with colleagues and students, inquiring together about some important issues and also doing things together that are simply enjoyable for their own sake - like playing soccer amid the fall colors on Rafferty. I have had a chance to help others build a fine department - and I am really grateful for the trust and independence the school has granted me as a teacher over the past thirty years. Now I look forward to caring for roses in New Hampshire until the next adventure comes over the horizon." -Dr. Avery

Dr. Avery joined the Andover community in 1976. He shares his enthusiasm and knowledge in RelPhil classes and displays his love of soccer as a long-time Cluster Soccer coach and coordinator.

"I was in his Intro to Ethics class. As a teacher he was legit. He really cared about the subject matter and usually got everyone engaged in heated debate by the end of every class... some friendships were even broken. And, he always wore the most awesome Bill Cosby-esque sweaters." -Dayo Adewole '10

"During my first time in Cluster Soccer, I remember not knowing what exactly to expect. It seemed like everyone was really hardcore about it as if it were a varsity sport, and yet people had told me it was as fun and enjoyable as anything offered at PA. As soon as I saw Mr. Avery roll up on his brightly colored mo-ped, barking directions out while wearing his trademark short-shorts, I could tell that no matter what happened and who 'won,' everyone was going to have a great time." -Bobby Chen '10

After coming to Andover in the Fall of 2008, Mr. Harba left this winter to join the Marine Corps. His surprise departure came as a shock to many of his students. A beloved man, he is dearly missed by the Andover community.

"Mr. Harba is a great guy and PA was lucky to have him as part of our community. I highly respect and admire him as a teacher and friend."
-Paul Dacey '10

"Mr. Harba turned the class into a tight group of friends by creating Arabic names, designing Arabic team apparel and encouraging discussion on anything we found of interest. I will definitely miss the various class conversations we had - ranging from the story of Layla and Majnun to his own cultural background to daily life at Andover. Mr. Harba was the guy who made your day." -Max Png '10

"For one homework assignment, I decided to write about how I lived a double life, attending Andover by day but Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry by night. Since I didn't know how to write the contrasting word 'but,' Mr. Harba wrote it out on the board for us: 'lakin.' For some reason, I used the word 'lakin' quite a bit in my story. Since then, the word has just stuck as an inside joke in our classroom. Even if I forget my own name in Arabic, I'll never forget how to say 'but.'"

"I like shooting events, sports, and performances because it's like a game; I have to anticipate what's going to happen next, and have to have a mental picture of composition and exposure before I even raise the camera. It's so demanding that it's almost like a sport; I'm always running around, getting on my knees, looking for that perfect shot. I also like taking photos of still objects and scenery because it's patient with me. I can take photos of it for hours, and it wouldn't complain, so I can take my time and perfect it as much as I want. I want to become better at taking photos of people. Each person expresses themselves in their appearance, and I want to capture their life."

"I am Tristin Moone of the Salt clan, born for the Salt clan. My maternal grandfather is Water's Edge and my paternal grandfather is Red-Running-Into-The-Water. Coming from Waterflow, New Mexico, I am Diné (Navajo). I aspire to advocate more Native Americans to pursue a higher education. I'm proud to represent my tribe and wish to serve the Navajo Nation in the future. For a taste of home while away, my parents send me mutton, venison jerky, piñon nuts, juniper berries and ash, ground blue corn, green and red chili, and Navajo tea. The fry bread and tortillas I have to make on my own."

"I've been using K'nex since I was six years old or so, and it's good stuff. When I was 11 years old, I started to build custom creations and stopped using instructions. When I was 12, I built my first ball machine based on an old K'nex set. Halfway through fall term, I decided that I had too much time, so I asked my parents to bring over my collection of K'nex. I originally had a plan for two separate towers on either side of the room, and in six weeks, it evolved into Project Dormitory. At first, the response from my dorm was confusion, then disbelief, and ultimately, awe."

"Crusading means to work for a greater good in the world. I thought, why don't I call myself a hero of justice? I run around with an American Eagle striped jersey with the sleeves around my neck so it would billow out when I ran. I guess you can trace my obsession with heroism even then. Then I started knighting people, making them pledge to fight for Great Justice, to work towards making the world a better place. Some of the stuff I try to do is a little misinformed, because I don't have enough knowledge to forge the Emerald Sword to defeat the Dark Lord. That's why I'm here – to gather Great Knowledge to defeat the Dark Swarm."

THE BRACE CENTER

"This winter, I had a really long research paper to write, and I decided to study in the Brace Center. I spent the whole night on the comfy couches, sipping delicious tea, and researching my paper topic. I had never used the books at the Brace Center before, and I realized how great of a resource it was when I did it. Although the hike to Abbott Campus is long, I was significantly more productive and comfortable in the Brace Center then in the library or Gelb."
- Elizabeth Oppong '12

COCHRAN CHAPEL

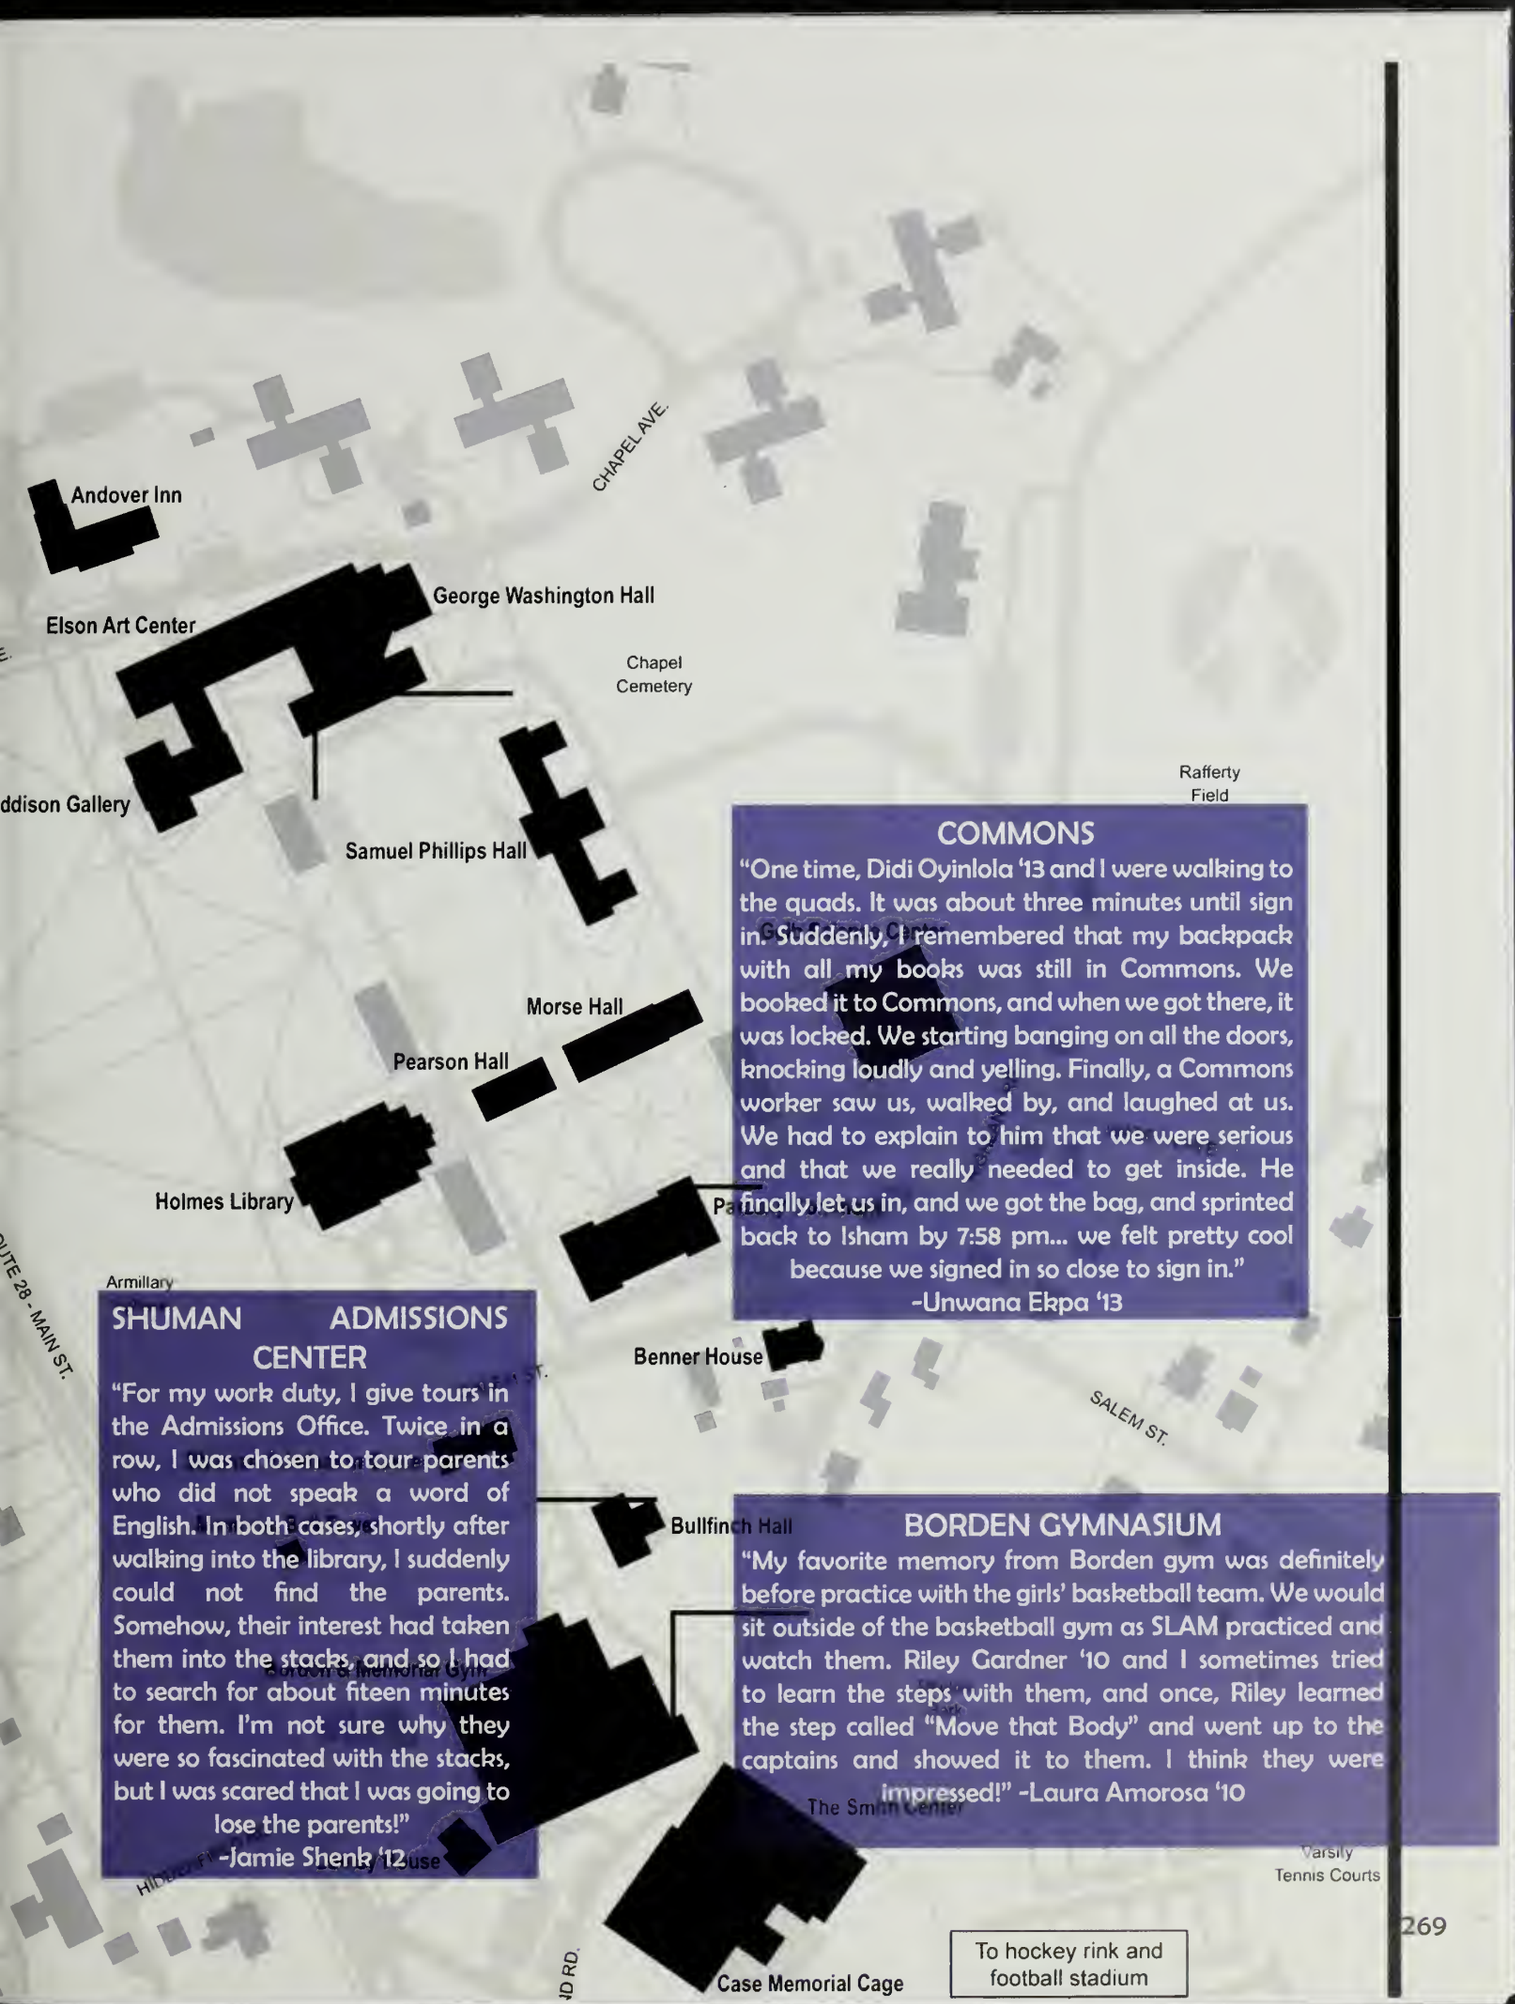

"My favorite All School Meeting this year was when the singer Jana Mashopee came and sang. She was inspiring, and had a very beautiful voice. The whole audience was dancing with her, clapping to the beat, and by the end of her performance many students went home and bought her album on iTunes. She was a Grammy award winner, and her message about being an individual really resonated with the students on campus."
- Kiara Valdez '12

THE PEABODY MUSEUM

"My work duty was at the Peabody Museum moving file boxes filled with bones from God knows where. One day, Donny Slater PHD, who works at the museum, took us out to the Great Lawn and taught us how to throw a javelin. He knew all about the intemation javelin throwing competition, and could throw a javelin like it was his job." - Ben Brodie '11

COMMONS

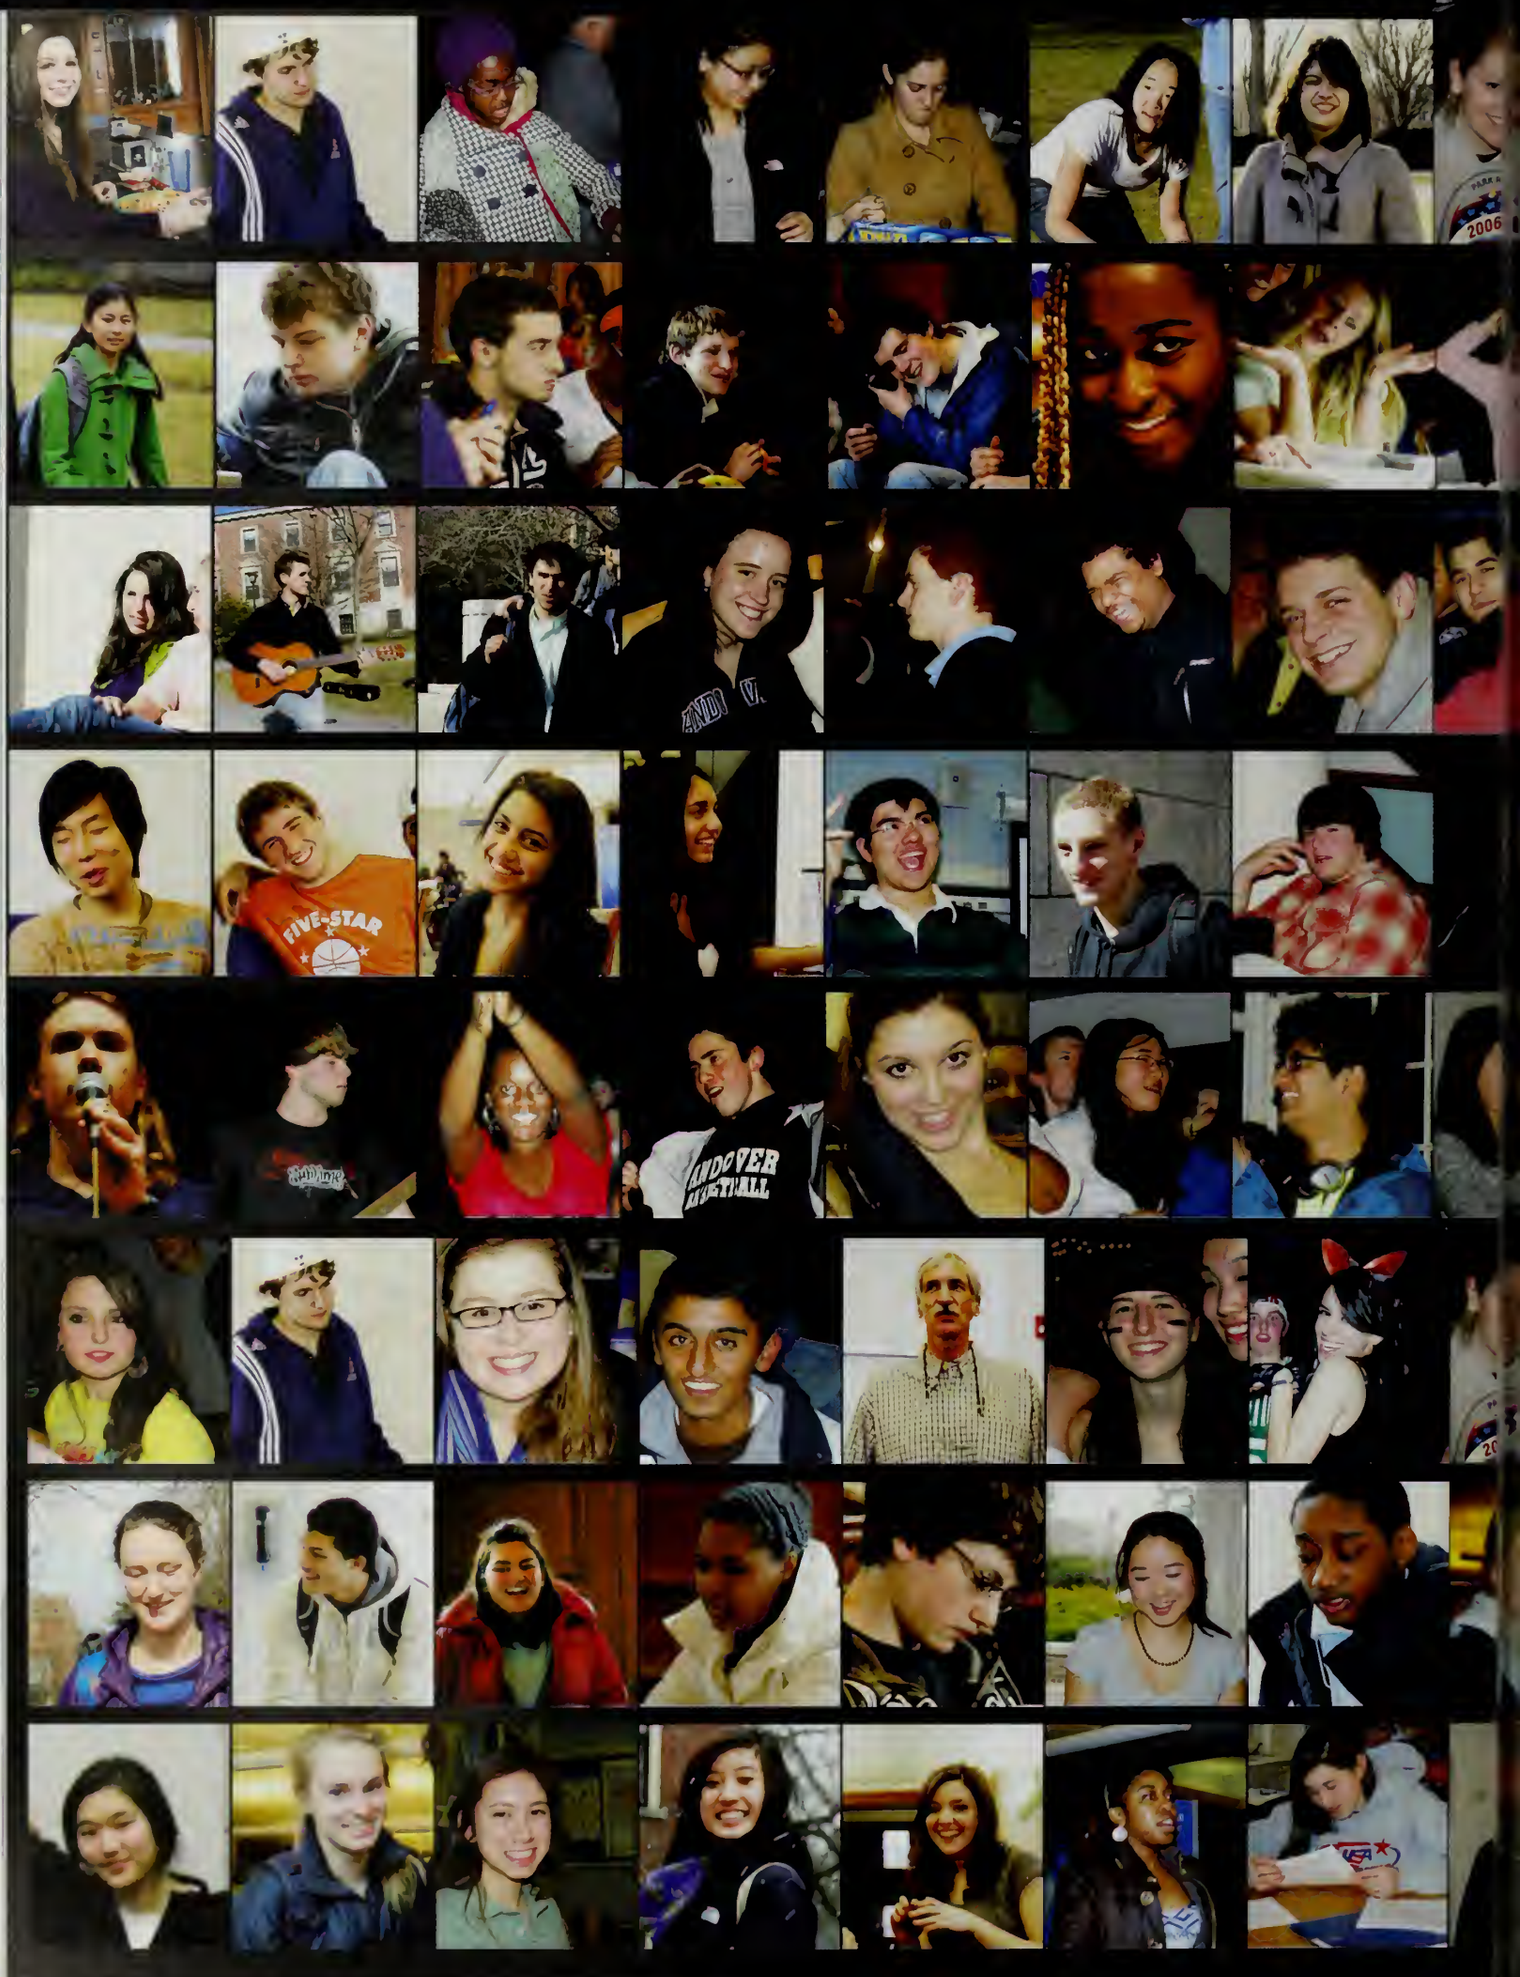

"One time, Didi Oyinlola '13 and I were walking to the quads. It was about three minutes until sign in. Suddenly, I remembered that my backpack with all my books was still in Commons. We booked it to Commons, and when we got there, it was locked. We starting banging on all the doors, knocking loudly and yelling. Finally, a Commons worker saw us, walked by, and laughed at us. We had to explain to him that we were serious and that we really needed to get inside. He finally let us in, and we got the bag, and sprinted back to Isham by 7:58 pm... we felt pretty cool because we signed in so close to sign in."
-Unwana Ekpa '13

SHUMAN ADMISSIONS CENTER

"For my work duty, I give tours in the Admissions Office. Twice in a row, I was chosen to tour parents who did not speak a word of English. In both cases, shortly after walking into the library, I suddenly could not find the parents. Somehow, their interest had taken them into the stacks, and so I had to search for about fifteen minutes for them. I'm not sure why they were so fascinated with the stacks, but I was scared that I was going to lose the parents!"
-Jamie Shenk '12

BORDEN GYMNASIUM

"My favorite memory from Borden gym was definitely before practice with the girls' basketball team. We would sit outside of the basketball gym as SLAM practiced and watch them. Riley Gardner '10 and I sometimes tried to learn the steps with them, and once, Riley learned the step called "Move that Body" and went up to the captains and showed it to them. I think they were impressed!" -Laura Amorosa '10

Dear Melissa,
From your very first days you have always faced life with a smile and a great curiosity to learn and try new things. You have the gift to see what others cannot. Your interests and abilities seem to have no limits. Four years at Andover have been a real opportunity for you to grow in so many ways by encouraging your passion for learning and creativity while nurturing your independent spirit. You've been able to take your art to another level but also accomplish the art of learning. And, you have made wonderful, lifelong friends.
Melissa, we are so proud of what you have accomplished but we are even more proud of the person you have become.

My Dear Chanel,
What a gracious and humble daughter and sister you have become. We want you to know that we love you and are proud of you, and to remind you that what you achieve in life is what you contribute to life. If you put in mediocrity then you will achieve, if you work hard, you will reap in abundance. Remember the road ahead will get rough, but with God surrounding you and guiding you, nothing you cannot achieve. Don't forget your humble beginnings and that we will be always there to support you when you stumble. Go experience life, reach for your goal, and see your dreams come true.
Love always,

"Our deepest fear is not that we are inadququate. Our deepest fear is that we are powerful beyond measure. It is our light, not our darkness, that most frightens us. Your playing small does not serve the world. There is nothing enlightened about shrinking so that other people won't feel insecure around you. We are all meant to shine as children do. It's not just in some of us; it is in everyone. And as we let our own lights shine, we unconsciously give other people permission to do the same. As we are liberated from our own fear, our presence automatically liberates others."

Chelsea Quezergue

To my daughter, Chelsea Renee Quezergue, with whom I am well pleased. Once again, you are about to embark on a new and unkown journey. Remember the journey the brought you to Andover? Remember the hesitancy? Remember Andover, the friendships, the staff, and most of all the fun times , family and friends had they sojourned to Andover.
Always keep in the forefront of your mind's eye that the Lord has "thoughts toward you... thoughts of peace and not evil, to give you a future and a hope". Live each day with joyful expectancy. Life, as you have learned, Chelsea, is full of unexpected surprises. Never miss an opportunity to show love and to do good for someone. Stay sweet and kind. Continue to cultivate your gracious and humble spirit. Always follow your heart. I speak all of this with tremedous pride on behalf of your entire family: Quezergues, Robinsons, Batchelors, Hales, Harpers and Belfields. To Andover--

We present the 2009-2010 edition of Pot Pourri with both excitement and nostalgia, eager to look at, read, and scrutinize this book. We've worked endlessly in the basement of Morse to produce the best documentary of the happenings of this year. Though this yearbook may be merely a first draft of our individual blueprints, it in itself is a finished product, serving as our tangible connection to Andover and our time here.

We are often asked why we dedicate so many hours to making a yearbook. You may have heard of us, but few know exactly what goes on in the ever cluttered home of Pot Pourri. We've solicited you to pre-order your yearbooks and frantically emailed you for quotes. We have collected your memories to remain in the Dean of Students office, the Pot Pourri room, and the hands of the graduating class. We strived to make a print of this year, because this year deserves to be remembered and cherished. It gives us great joy to capture a memorable image in correct aperture and shutter speed, and to write a great memory in the record books.

Throughout the making of this book, we've discovered the very core of this school's spirit – through the students and teachers, the plans and recollections, and the infinite shades of blue. We are a student body of great talent and intellect. The things we have accomplished and endured this year are nothing short of amazing.

Each of us has been raised in part by Andover itself. For somewhere between the awkward small talk we made upon first meeting our roommate, and our final moments on the great lawn basking in the glory of Senior Spring, we've grown into very different people than the ones we were when we first began. Ultimately, it's Andover that leaves its prints upon us. The place becomes a fundamental component of our character that we can no longer imagine ourselves without.

Memories can blur over time. But the snapshots and stories enclosed here are in fine print, and we hope they will sharpen and focus those vaulted thoughts to remind you of those things which should never be forgotten. Class of 2010: as you move into unfamiliar dorms and join new Facebook networks, don't ever forget the Blueprints you've laid here.

Finally, the members of the upper board Mari Miyachi, Haley Scott, Daniela Pimentel, Julie Xie, Caroline Gezon, and Kelsey Lim would like to thank our dedicated editor-in-chief, Claire King. This publication is proof of her extraordinary leadership, time, and heart. She has and never will fail to brighten our days.

Most of all, we would like to thank you, the student body and faculty, for sharing your memories with this community. We are honored to have played a role in documenting your time here, and we hope you enjoy this official blueprint of Andover 2009-2010.

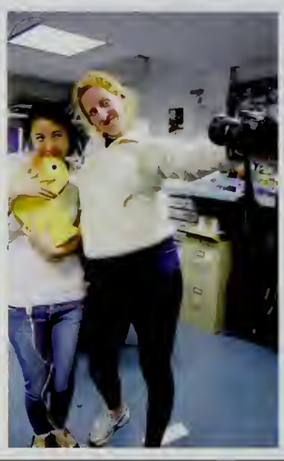

Sincerely,

Pot Pourri 2009-2010

FO SHO!!!!

To my girls—

Well it has been quite a year in Morse basement. I could not have asked for a more dedicated, enthusiastic, innovative, and nutty board. You've seen me at my absolute worst, seriously, the number of times I've gone from EIC to Godzilla in this office is a little embarrassing. And yet you never let me down. Though to our peers, this yearbook may be nothing more than entertainment for a single lunch period, know that to me, this has truly been everything. I have spent more time in Pot Pourri than in my dorm this year, and just as I made this office my home, I made this board my family. I cannot believe how far we've come. A year ago, we were a mess...remember the supplement? Thanks to this one silly high school publication I've spent the majority of my senior year, tired, overwhelmed, and sick to my stomach (laffy taffy and coke diet?), but I can honestly say it was worth it. I wish I could find a better way to say all this, but deadline is in ten minutes and I'm feeling a little rushed....lol? So to Mari, Haley, Julie, Kelsey, Caroline, Daniela, and the rest of Pot Pourri—thank you for putting up with me, each of you has played an incredibly important role in my senior year. And to Susan, I don't think I will ever know anyone as passionate about life as you are. You have truly been the best, there's no other way to say it. In fact, we've often called you 'God' here in Pot Pourri. You're just that good. For phone calls, emails, texts, facebook messages, laughs, and never ending support—thanks, we truly owe it all to you. Pot Pourri, I love you. Working as hard as we did towards a common goal has truly left its own blueprint on me, my time in Morse with you is something I will never forget. Thank you, I love you, and I am so so proud.

Pot Po. Fo sho. Fo lyfe.

COLOPHON

The Colophon

From the basement of Morse Hall, the Pot Pourri Staff is proud to present Phillips Academy Andover's 123rd edition of Pot Pourri. Phillips Academy Andover is located at 180 Main Street in Andover, Massachusetts. The 2010 Pot Pourri board selected the theme "Blueprints" with the help of Susan Happel at the Herff Jones' Boston Yearbook Academy in July of 2009. The theme was chosen to highlight the fundamentals that highlight our lives at Andover, the marks we leave on the school, and the lasting imprint it leaves on us in return.

Layouts were designed on four Mac Desktops which were generously funded by the Abbot Association through a grant given to Pot Pourri in October, 2009. The layouts were designed in In-Design CS4. The photos and blueprints were edited in Photoshop. All Layouts, photos, and text was submitted through E-Page on www.yearbook.biz. The portrait section of the book was made withphotos by the photographers at Davor Photography. All sections were created using Berlin Sans FB, Helvetica, and a number of other decorative fonts.

All 344 pages of Blueprints are printed in color, making the 2009-2010 edition of Pot Pourri the first all-color yearbook in Phillips Academy history. The price of the yearbook is $125, we also offered a special price of $100 for those who preordered. The book includes a Spring Supplement to be designed by the newly selected 2010-2011 board of Pot Pourri.

None of this would have ever been possible without our ever patient advisor, Zack Hobbs and our Herff Jones representative, Susan Happel. Special thanks to Adam Levine, and Yuto Watanabe for their photos, Juliet Liu for Then and Now, Cindy Efinger, Ms. Mohammed, and Ms. Fortino.
